Who Shall Control—the Owner, the Worker, or the Government?

Gradually the Question Must Be Answered Finally. Here and There It Has Been Answered.

In the beginning, when things are little, one man says "I OWN THIS" and nobody denies it.

The worker says: "Yes, you own it. I must do what you say."

The Government says: "Yes, he owns it. And it is my business to see that everybody KNOWS that he owns it and obeys him."

In this little 1-2-3inning the owner rules, the Government sustains him in his rule, and the worker obeys.

Presently the proposition gets bigger, the number of workmen is great, the owner is distant and impersonal.

The workers begin to say: "Yes, you OWN it, but we CREATE it. We alone make its success possible. We have RIGHTS and we shall enforce them. We are dissatisfied."

And the Government, always changing as public opinion changes, now says:

"Yes, you own it, but the men have rights. I can no longer put them in jail or brand them with a red-hot iron on the forehead for organizing a labor union or going on strike, as I used to do. You own it, but as they say, the workmen create it, and they have rights. But try to get along somehow and keep peaceable."

On this new uncertain basis the "OWNER" and the "WORKER" go along for awhile. A good deal of energy, time and money are wasted in strikes, idleness, fighting. Each side hates the other.

After a while it is more difficult to "go along." The workers are numerous and savage. The "Owners" are two thousand miles away. The "I own it" and the "we create it" elements fight irreconcilably.

Then Government, worried, comes in—as recently in Colorado, for instance, and says, "He owns it, and you create it, but I DEMAND PEACE. You must stop fighting, no matter what else you do."

And Government being powerful, the fight ends.

We have "property" in all three of its stages. We have the little man, with his little property, his few employes, subservient.

We have the bigger concern, with the more numerous employes, the unions, the strikes, the lockouts, the riots.

We have the very big thing, where no issue seems possible, where soldiers of the Government, with loaded rifles, march up and down, and spend the people's money, keeping peace between the "I own it" and "we create it" elements.

How is the thing going to be settled?

In certain directions it has been settled already in one way, and in the only final way—GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP.

The business of carrying the letters was TOO BIG for the "I own it" gentlemen. It was infinitely too big also for the "we create it" gentlemen.

We couldn't have a postal service owned by a Rockefeller or disrupted by a dissatisfied labor leader.

But we can perfectly well have it owned BY THE PEOPLE themselves, that is, by the Government, managed by them, wages regulated by them, strikes unknown, service good.

What we have had for a long time in the Postoffice we have now in the parcels post, replacing the incompetent express companies.

And soon also the "I own it" and "we operate it" railroads will be a thing of the past—replaced by Government ownership.

Little by little, as things get too big for the "I own it" and the "we create it" elements, Government of all of the people will have to come in and say, "We shall attend to it and do it properly."

Our Postoffice, our parcels post are now adjusted. Telephones, telegraphs and railroads SOON will be adjusted.

The steamship proposition in which the "I own it" American gentleman has proved a dismal failure, will become a successful Government ownership proposition.

The big question is, how can the little businesses and the somewhat bigger businesses, with the "I own it" and the "I create it" elements at odds, continue to exist successfully? That is the country's business!

Some plan should be found to prevent, legally and equitably, waste of time, waste of money, brutality and lawlessness in industry, whether caused by the self-sufficient arrogance of "I own it" or the disestimation of "I create it."

Forests Are More Important Than Pleasure of Hunting

Governor Walsh met a very serious situation with respect to danger from hunters promptly and wisely when he suspended the privilege of hunting in the uplands. Our forests are infinitely more important to the whole people of the State than any possible pleasure which those who enjoy hunting can derive from a sport which endangers our trees. There is, however, another phase of this situation which ought to have the attention of the public authorities. In parts of Boston, on Columbus Day, men with guns were so thick as to make it a miracle that scores were not injured.

The privilege of hunting ought to be more seriously and intelligently regulated in the State. But it is not necessary to make it impossible for people of moderate means to enjoy the sport.

The AMERICAN is the last newspaper in the country which would advocate restricting the pleasure to those of unusual means. Yet it is a sport which people enjoy with various degrees of intensity. Some would be willing to make a greater sacrifice for the privilege of hunting than others.

If endangered property and human life in a State as thickly populated as Massachusetts. The Commonwealth also has to maintain its administrative agencies for the regulation of the sport which is considerable, and it has to be borne not only by those who enjoy the sport but also by those who do not, and who are thus taxed wholly for the benefit of others.

Under these circumstances, there should be a license charge sufficient to limit the sport to those who enjoy it enough to make some real sacrifice for its pleasure. As this sacrifice would vary in degree according to a man's income, it would be perfectly feasible to graduate the license fee according to income. But the minimum fee ought to be sufficient to restrict the sport to a reasonable number of people who really enjoy it and who do not get out hunting because they have nothing else to do.

From the increased revenue which would arise from an increased license fee, a decent enforcement of the law against shooting in the closed season could be secured. More game wardens and more vigorous prosecutions of those detected in violation of the game laws, together with a better co-operation by the lower courts with the Fish and Game Commission and with the wardens, would even make hunting in Massachusetts any atrocities as well as safe to those who enjoy it.

"I Shall Pass Through This World But Once"

I shall pass through this world but once. Any good thing that I can do, therefore, or any kindness I can show to any human being, let me do it now. Let me not defer nor neglect it, for I shall not pass this way again.—Stephen Grellet, Quaker missionary in New Jersey in the Eighteenth Century.

The Men-Made Gods

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

SAID the Kaiser's god to the god of the Czar:
"Hark, hark how my people pray;
Their faith, ruthless, is greater by far
Than all the faiths of the others are;
They know I will help them slay."

Said the god of the Czar: "My people call
In a medley of tongues; they know
I will lend my strength to them one and all,
Wherever they fight their foes shall fall
Like grass where the mowers go."

Then the god of the Gauls spoke out of a cloud
To the god of the King nearby:
"Our people pray, tho' they pray not loud;
They ask for courage to slaughter a crowd,
And to laugh, tho' themselves may die."

And far out into the heart of Space
Where a lonely pathway crept,
Up over the stars, to a secret place,
Where no light shone but the light of his face,
Christ covered his eyes and wept.

How Helen Helped

CHAPTER IV.

"No, no, I must look after Helen"

TWO day after the affair as the yacht, when Frank had thrown Van Burns to the deck for trying to force Helen to kiss him, Frank sat at his desk trying to figure out what to do. He knew Van Burns would try to make it uncomfortable for him in the office and maybe get him to serious trouble. At first he thought of quitting and finding some other firm, but then he realized that it is not always easy to find a new job.

"I haven't saved any money," said Frank to himself. "I wish I had, for I certainly owe my life to Helen."

Frank, like so many others, morally lived up to his best and was counted on the next pay day to see him through. He had another thought of some day starting a bank account, but in an indefinite way and always put it off until next pay day. For he didn't realize the testimony that will come when Mrs. Florence Carman goes on trial for her life on a charge of murdering her husband, Dr. Richard Carman, Sr., of Wallet Mrs. Carman is charged with the use of poisons eight and that it struck and killed Mrs. Louise Bailey, whom she discovered in the apartment of Lynn Smith, the "mysterious widow," whose story has prevented him from guarding closely, will be the main evidence at the trial, it is said.

Assistant District Attorney Weeks has announced that he will prove that Mrs. Carman overheard on the day of the conversation which Mrs. Bailey had with Lynn Smith, in which the latter threatened to expose her daughter Elizabeth to stop alleged attentions of Dr. Carman to the girl. It is said that Mrs. Carman returned in further conversation, came to the apartment of Mrs. Bailey on the floor of the house, and from the front of the house, and from which two months before the poor woman had fallen to her death in a similar affair.

It will be claimed that Dr. Carman was in the habit of giving his wife a dose of medicine at night, and the State will attempt to prove through chemists that the fatal dose was not of morphine from poisons holding a plaint at the window.

Mrs. Florence Carman is reported as being quite calm in certainly the most widely known woman, in this country. Fra had an offer from a motion picture company to pose for a picture, but refused it. She has been offered $100,000 for the rights to her story.

Attorneys for Mrs. Carman are preparing to contest the testimony that will be offered by Lynn Smith of Freeport. He is reported to assert that he was a frequent visitor at the Carman home shortly before the death of Mrs. Bailey.

Much stress has been laid by the defense upon the failure to find a receipt for the diamonds for which Mrs. Bailey was slain. It was declared that such receipt had been found in the possession of Dr. Carman by the police.

DEFENCE MAKES PLANS.

It is intimated Smith's willingness to be a witness against Mrs. Carman may be based upon a desire for immunity. Attorney John J. Arthur of Boston Clausby, chief counsel for Mrs. Carman, declared that he would not call Smith as a witness. He will deal with Mrs. Carman several years ago, when he was a clerk in the office of the district attorney, and has been a client of the District Attorney since that time, it is said.

Arthur's decision to call Smith as a witness upon the methods employed by police and District Attorney Pelletier in their investigation of the case, and the methods which followed the arrest of Mrs. Carman. Mrs. Carman is being watched at the window of the cell in which she is confined, it was said.

Irishmen Should Forget, Says William O'Brien, M. P.

"France has forgotten Waterloo and even a humiliation as late as Fashoda to welcome the English alliance. Too Russians have forgotten Sebastopol. Too Germans have forgotten the extirpation of the South African republics.

In Heaven's name, why should Irishmen be the only race on earth to be incapable of showing similar good sense? Nobody in his senses proposes to fight England; why not go now step further and heartily help her to fight her battles, knowing that we are fighting our own as well?"

These logical words are but from the pen of William O'Brien, M. P., editor of the Cork Free Press, who has served long months in jail for his able advocacy of Irish rights.

Read what Mr. Patrick Egan of New York has to say on the subject of "Ireland's Honor" in next Sunday's AMERICAN.

NEXT pay day. For he didn't realize the little old business instinct sought in one's inside pocket is the best friend anyone can have in this world, and one that will stay with you a whole lot longer than the rest.

"Then, besides," said Frank, "I've got to stay here and look after Helen, for I know what that fellow will do if he gets the chance. I wonder just what he meant when he said, 'I could have you fired, but I prefer other ways of getting even'? Oh, well, let him start. I'm looking out for him, all right."

As Frank sat there musing about all this Van Burns passed his desk, and, with a sneer, said to himself, "Good morning, most righteous procurer of the working girl."—H. C.

NEW ACCUSER WILL SWEAR MRS. CARMAN WAS JEALOUS

NEW YORK, Oct. 17.—The State will claim, when Mrs. Florence Carman goes on trial for her life in Boston next Monday, that the husband, Dr. Richard Carman, lodged the bullet, Mrs. Carman is charged with, in a jealous rage and that it struck and killed Mrs. Louise Bailey, when she discovered in the apartment of Lynn Smith, the "mysterious widow," whose story has prevented him from guarding closely, will be the main evidence at the trial, it is said.

MYSTERY PUZZLES POLICE

GETS WRIT TO STOP CRUSHER

An investigation is being made today by the police of the Wool Textile Company as a precaution against fraud. Frank H. Fuller, a lawyer, has an office at No. 19 Main street, who was employed by a man of about 50 years suffering from a fractured skull in the Wool Textile Company's plant at Hyde Park, Saturday morning.

William F. Sullivan, who is employed by the Wool Textile Company, is at work and that is true at No. 19 Main street, Hyde Park, in connection with the case. He was arraigned in the East Roxbury Court before Judge Sullivan, charged with selling liquor without authority, on October 21. Then a complaint was issued for the arrest of Fuller, charging him with selling liquor without authority. He was released on $500 bail.

Shortly after 7 o'clock today, as the result of a telephone conversation, Lieutenant Herbert of the West Roxbury station dispatched Sergeant Nixon and Patrolmen Schultz, Johnson and Callahan to the home where Fuller has business apartments.

The officers saw Fuller in his office at the front door, which was locked. They broke in the door and arrested him by means of a warrant.

The officers then found Fuller on the floor of his office, with a bullet hole in one of a pair which he used in exercising.

Fuller refused to tell anything about the affair, it is said.

Sullivan, according to the police, is employed by the Wool Textile Company and has not called at the house by the police, it is said.

He told the police that the doorbell had been out of order for a fortnight and when Fuller answered the bell he was unarmed. Sullivan says that he called the police on the telephone.

It is the belief of the police, however, that the affair which ended in the lawyer's death, as the result of a bullet wound, was a case of suicide.

Edward Brown, who was arrested here on a charge of assault and battery, was arraigned in the East Boston Court this morning and was fined $10.

Heavy Business at Boston Postoffice

The Boston postoffice is doing more business than ever, despite the European war.

An indication of improved business conditions is given in the statement issued by Postmaster Murray that the receipts for the month of September were $1,000 more than for the same period last year.

Fuller refused to tell anything about the affair, it is said.

WIENER IN ATTACK BY CABLE

Special Cable to the Boston American.

LONDON, Oct. 17.—Hugo Wiener of Hasbrouck Heights, N. J., and Boston, will today to the AMERICAN:

"I am quite sure that I have never made a will and shall refuse it if Professor Munsterberg is selected by Harvard. I remember Munsterberg's extreme remarks against the English-speaking nations should be published. I am sure that the American people will be shocked to hear this. On the other hand I think I can determine by a valuable asset in England and his ability, because his methods are singularly clumsy.

Munsterberg, however, is observer and far more dangerous. Still I think his extreme views will soon terminate and he will be recalled. I am prepared to forfeit $100,000 for the right."

Found Unconscious from Gas at Lynn

WASHINGTON, Oct. 17.—Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, the pure food expert, seventy years old, gives as his recipe for longevity today: "Take care of your teeth."

Distinct successes by the allies in northeastern and northwestern France, officially announced by the War Office at Paris, and a Berlin official Berlin statement that the German right in Belgium has been reinforced and a new offensive ordered against the defenders of Paris are the important points in the late war dispatches today.

Paris says that the allies have occupied Flourbaix, near Armentieres, and have made additional gains in the region of Arras (Lille region) and St. Michiel (Verdun district). Flourbaix is but six miles from Armentieres, which is close to Lille. There was an official report earlier in the day that Lille had been occupied by the allies, who had first driven out the Germans.

It is also reported that the French are within a few miles of Metz.

FEAR NEW PARIS ADVANCE.

The Berlin report says that the reinforced German right wing is going to make an offensive movement with the greatest possible energy. The movement is to be directed against the allied troops defending Calais. "We know this movement will win the longing that is in every German heart," the statement concludes.

The German progress in Belgium and on the northern frontier of France is viewed with increased apprehension in Paris and London military circles, according to a Bordeaux dispatch today, which says:

"It is feared the Germans will extend their sweep of the north coast to Dunkirk, and even to Calais, opposite Dover, England.

"With its battle line from the German frontier to the English Channel thus shortened, the German front will gain in strength.

"As the French army has been unequal to the task of turn-

Charles Sumner Bird Asked Governor Walsh a Question

The Governor Answers Mr. Bird, and the Answer Is for YOU. It Will Be an Important Feature—Perhaps the Most Important Feature—in Governor's Sunday Assertion.

Mr. Charles Sumner Bird, last year's Progressive candidate for Governor, has publicly asked Governor Walsh to explain "the wide gulf that stretches between his platform promises and the performances of his administration."

Governor Walsh will answer Mr. Bird in a special statement in the Sunday AMERICAN of tomorrow.

The Governor will explain and defend the record of his administration. He will point out a condition in Massachusetts, little understood by our citizens, which makes a mockery of a government by a majority of our people.

No voter who wishes to cast his ballot intelligently at the coming State election should fail to read and consider the Governor's discussion of this year's work of the Legislature under his leadership. He states frankly the points wherein he failed and he tells why. He retains the things accomplished and the progress made.

It is for you, Mr. Voter, to decide, after you have read the Governor's statement in the Sunday AMERICAN, whether you think his administration has been worth while.

LOWELL GIRL ELOPES WITH BACK BAY MAN

The parents and friends of Miss Madeline M. White of No. 86 Belmont avenue, Lowell, were astonished to learn she had become the heroine of a runaway marriage with Spencer P. Kennard of No. 31 Newbury street, Boston.

The wedding took place in Boston. Relatives of the couple decline to say where or by whom it was performed. After they had notified their parents and received forgiveness, Mr. and Mrs. Kennard left for New York on the first stage of their wedding journey.

There was no objection on the part of the parents of either the bride or the bridegroom except on the score of youth. Mr. Kennard is only twenty-two years old and his wife three years his junior.

They have been friends for the past three years and have been seen together frequently during the past Summer at Magnolia, where the White have their Summer home.

During the last month the bride's parents have been living in an apartment hotel in the Back Bay, so Kennard was able to offer his license without the necessity of duplicating it in Lowell.

The bride is the daughter of A. William White, head of the White Tanneries in Lowell, a subsidiary concern of the American Hide and Leather Company, and one of the largest plants of its kind in the country.

Kennard is the son of Mrs. Daphne Hills, with whom he has made his home, and a nephew of Arthur W. Kennard of No. 167 Beacon street, a member of the jewelry firm of Hodgson, Kennard & Co., at No. 25 State street.

Mrs. Lydig Home from War Zone

NEW YORK, Oct. 17.—Mrs. Philip Lydig, whose ill-health last year was the cause of anxiety among friends, returned from Europe on the Mauretania. "I am not so very far past 40," Mrs. Lydig said, "but I have as much improved that with a quiet Winter here I feel I shall be back again in perfect health within the year."

DECREE FILED FOR NEW HAVEN DISSOLUTION

NEW YORK, Oct. 17.—The decree agreed upon for the dissolution of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Company was filed today in the Federal Court and was signed by Judge Mayer.

Under the terms of the decree three sets of trustees are appointed to take charge of the disposal of the securities of the various companies held by the New Haven.

The first set of trustees is to take charge of the New Haven holdings of the Boston & Maine Railroad, now held by the Boston Railroad Holding Company.

The second set is to have charge of the New Haven holdings of trolley lines in New Hampshire and the third of trolley holdings in Rhode Island.

Attorney-General Gregory states that the trustees are to be made officers of these properties and will have charge of the election of the New Haven holdings as provided for by the decree.

The first set of trustees is Marcus P. Knowlton, Henry B. Day, James L. Dohorty and Charles F. Hall, all of Massachusetts; Frank P. Carpenter of Manchester, N. H.

TWOHIG SEES INTIMIDATION IN DRISCOLL CASE

Charging that police intimidation has made it impossible for him to arrange a mass meeting to protest against the arrest of Katherine Driscoll, seventeen-year-old lame girl, for loitering on the street, former Representative James J. Twohig today undertook to circulate a petition asking the removal or transfer of Captain Lee of the Broadway station.

Katherine Driscoll is a little girl who lives on Tudor street. She was arrested and taken to court and fined for "loitering." She, her family, and her neighbors denounce the police for the arrest and assert the girl has been persecuted.

Former Representative Twohig, a prominent South Boston man, declared today that there have been many "similar instances of police persecution." He said:

"I have tried to arrange a mass meeting to protest against this girl's arrest. But the use of Maynard Hall, Dahlgren Hall, Bethesda Hall and Congress Hall have all been refused to me.

"I believe the refusal is due to police interference. In my opinion the police have intimidated those in charge of the halls.

"What I will do now is to have a petition drawn up—and signed by as many citizens as dare to sign it—asking Commissioner O'Meara to transfer Captain Lee of the Broadway station to another district.

"The arrest of Katherine Driscoll was only one of several arrests for 'loitering' which had made me make up my mind to protest. Many poor men, with wives and children dependent upon them, are pounced upon by the police when they leave a saloon with hardly a sign of liquor upon them.

"It is a crying shame the way patrolmen are sent out of the Broadway station to 'get' men. A respectable young man can hardly stand a minute on the sidewalk without being arrested for 'loitering.'

"The course pursued by the police is making criminals out of many young men. They get a record in court, and then they don't care what they do."

U. S. OUTLOOK IS FOR BUMPER CROP HARVEST

WASHINGTON, Oct. 17.—Crop conditions during September were so favorable that the expectation of the yield increase was 1.4 per cent. and the prospects on October 1 were that the yields would be 6.4 per cent. better than last year. The composite condition of all crops on October 1 was 93.2 per cent. of the average.

This was the "agricultural outlook" announced today by the Department of Agriculture in its monthly, "The Farmers' Bulletin."

The most marked improvement during September, the department says, was made in tobacco, potatoes and corn. Oats production was slightly above earlier expectations and about an average total output. Spring wheat fell below the forecast and materially short of the average. The total wheat production, the Bulletin says, comes within eight million bushels of the anticipated nine hundred million. This will leave a surplus for exportation and feed for livestock of two hundred and ninety million bushels, the department estimates.

With favorable conditions thus far in October, the department looks for a total production of corn this year of about 2,700,000,000 bushels against 2,447,000,000 last year. The total production of all cereals, based on the October 1 condition, will be about 12,740,000,000 tons compared with 11,699,000 tons last year. A potato crop of 334,000,000 bushels is expected. This would be exceeded only by the record crop of 421,000,000 bushels in 1912.

The latest forecast of 220,000,000 bushels of apples is within 5,000,000 bushels of the estimated record crop of 1912.

The cotton crop improved during September in the eastern and central sections, but fell off slightly in the western, and indications point to a crop of more than 15,000,000 bales, second only to the crop of 15,693,000 bales in 1911, the report states.

On October 1 the condition of sugar beets was 91.9 per cent. of normal. This forecasts a harvest of about 4,826,000 tons, against 5,659,000 tons last year.

During September the level of prices paid for principal crops decreased about 2.5 per cent., being about 3.9 per cent. lower on October 1 than a year ago.

Prices paid to producers for meat animals decreased .7 per cent. during the month from August 15 to September 15. This compares with an average advance in the period in the past four years of 3.4 per cent.

'Kaiser Aimed Shot at Monroe Doctrine'

LONDON, Oct. 17.—Sir Valentine Chirol, in an article in the Quarterly Review, avers that for the first time the fact that an attempt was made by Germany during the latter stages of the South African war to bring England into an offensive and defensive alliance which would virtually have committed England to support Germany in any attempt to override the Monroe Doctrine.

FIND YOUTH IN LYNN WITH SKULL BROKEN

A young man found with skull fractured at the foot of a stairway leading to a garage at No. 102 Central avenue, Lynn, today, is thought by the police to have been attacked and possibly robbed.

The youth's head was in a pool of blood. Close by was an empty whiskey bottle, bearing a blood stain. The first belief was that the young man had been intoxicated, fallen down the stairway and injured himself.

But the police reported later that Lynn Hospital surgeons said they did not think the youth had been drinking. This led to a theory that he had been hit on the head with the bottle and knocked down the stairway. There was no money or other valuables in his pockets.

The surgeons fear the youth will not survive. The police are trying to learn his identity. He is about twenty years old and of light complexion. His suit of pepper and salt pattern, and other clothing are of good material.

BOSTON AMERICAN

WILL AGAIN SEE NOTED ACTRESS

By HARLEIGH SCHULTZ.

Julia Arthur, known the world over as the Bernhardt of the American stage, and in private life Mrs. Benjamin P. Cheney, the wife of one of Boston's wealthiest men, is going to return to the footlights.

Like Mary Anderson, she will give up the life of a society matron to play once more, after a long lapse of time—and the reason with both is the same—for charity's sake.

Mrs. Cheney is to appear at the Plymouth Theatre next month in Thomas Bailey Aldrich's two-act drama "Mercedes." The role is one which she created years ago at the old Palmer's Theatre in New York city, and which has never since been acted. The performance will be the dramatic event of the season.

There will be a second performance—in the same play in New York and for the benefit of the same charity. This will be in December. This second performance may be her last appearance on the stage.

Today Mrs. Cheney told her reason for her return to the stage. It is to help the European Actors' Relief fund.

BEGINS REHEARSALS.

"The need is urgent," she said. "Practically every actor in Europe is at the front, fighting. That the war has brought about an emergency which makes its appeal to every member in the profession elsewhere. The families of these actor fighters are in want, and the little I can do I shall do.

"I shall simply break my long silence for my old associates on the stage. The entire proceeds of the performance will go into the European Actors' Relief Fund."

Mrs. Cheney has already begun her rehearsals of the little masterpiece by the famous Boston poet. Assisting her in the production is Mrs. Aldrich, the poet's widow. Rehearsing with her are Forrest Robinson, William Courtleigh, Ernest Glendinning and Madame Cottrelly, each of whom eagerly volunteered in the good cause.

The drama will probably be put on for the matinee on the second Tuesday in November. Mrs. Cheney is herself devoting all her time to the work of ensuring the success of the performance, and is not only directing the rehearsals—a matter of the utmost importance, because of her knowledge of the play and its author's ideas and wishes in its production—but she is attending to most of the details of the arrangements, such as securing the patronesses and so on.

I found Mrs. Cheney still the wonderful woman older playgoers delight to remember—young in appearance, beautiful, gracious as well as graceful, with the same dark eyes and the same raven black hair which carry one back to the days when she was acclaimed the greatest of Juliets. The years that have passed since she gave up the stage to become the wife of the Boston business man, have brought but little change in one of the greatest actresses of all time, whose genius has thrilled thousands upon thousands, and whose fame will long be upon numberless lips. She is one of the few women over whose acting a whole world raved.

DISCUSSES PLAY.

The performances in Boston and New York may be Mrs. Cheney's last upon any stage.

"One never can tell," she declared. "It may be that requests will come to repeat the play for some cause. And one's heart can never be stilled to the appeals of or for the less fortunate of our brothers and sisters.

"William Faversham and Mr. Wise are in charge of the European Actors' Relief Fund, and a worthy cause it is in truth. You know that are known no home. Our President at Washington has counselled neutrality, and we do not think of nationality in a cause like this. Our hearts go out to all those to whom war brings privation and hardship. We can imagine the horror of war, and the imagination must bring home to us the need of our doing what we can to aid those who may be in distress.

"'Mercedes' is a beautiful little play. Madame Cottrelly is to have the part of Ursula, the old grandmother. Mr. Glendinning will be cast for Captain Achille Lourois. The role of Lieutenant Labesterets, which, by the way, was created by Maurice Barrymore, will be played by Mr. Courtleigh. Mr. Robinson will play the part of Padre Josef."

In the Sunday AMERICAN tomorrow will appear the full story of the benefit performance, with numerous photographs of Mrs. Cheney.

ACCUSE CHICAGO POLICEMAN AS IN BECKER CASE

CHICAGO, Oct. 17.—C. P. Bertsche, a politician and gambler, who was wounded with four others, including two policemen, during a recent shooting affair, has sworn out a warrant charging Police Lieutenant John Tobin, second in command of the detective force, with being an accessory before an assault to murder.

William Egan and James Monaghan, detectives, who participated in the daylight street fight, are charged with assault with intent to kill and murder.

The whole city is stirred up over the shooting, which is similar to the slaying of Herman Rosenthal, the gambler, in New York. It is reported that the shooting was for the purpose of closing the mouth of Bertsche.

The Assistant State's Attorney who aided Bertsche in getting the warrant, said that Lieutenant Tobin, who has not hitherto been mentioned in connection with the shooting, was in the company of Egan and Monaghan both before and after the shooting.

STEAMFITTERS' STRIKE MAY TIE UP BUILDINGS

Members of Steamfitters Helpers' Union No. 63 have voted to go on strike Monday because the employers have refused to grant their demands for a wage increase. Although there are only about 500 men in the union, the strike will affect more than 1,000 men and some forty shops, and may involve thousands of other building trades workers.

The strike vote of the members was taken and the strike ordered following a report of its wage committee that the employers had turned down their demands.

In their original demand the men asked for a wage of $2 a day, which was flatly refused by the employers. The men then compromised on $2.75 a day, which was met by the employers with a proffer of $2.50 a day. The union refused to accept this offer on the ground it would not be an increase, as more than 90 per cent. of the members now receive that rate of pay.

OLD GUARD NOW IN LAST STAND, SAYS WALKER

Joseph Walker, former Speaker of the Massachusetts House and Progressive candidate for the Governorship, at Gardner last night said:

"Since the Progressives left the Republican party, the inevitable thing has happened all over the country. The reactionaries have taken possession of the Republican party and they intend to retain control. Penrose in Pennsylvania, Barnes in New York, Sullowav in New Hampshire, are but illustrations of the general tendency everywhere.

"In Massachusetts reactionary nominees are standing on a reactionary platform. While the Progressives are emphasizing personal and human rights, the Massachusetts Republican platform exalts property rights. What cruelties have not been practised in the name of 'property rights' since the days of the negro slave? The old guard, this year, is making its last stand in Massachusetts. The Progressives established their party two years ago. Last year they raised it to second place. The old guard realizes that, if they do not break the Progressives this year, their dominance is gone forever.

"These reactionary leaders, after rejecting Progressive principles, now have the hardihood to invite all Progressives and Independents to come over and help them re-establish themselves. This year there will, indeed, be amalgamation of Progressives with progressives, freed from the influence of the liquor traffic and all other special interests and fighting for the protection of the American home and the American worker."

TELL HOW TO GET TRADE IN SOUTH AMERICA

"Badly translated circulars and inferior printed matter will never attract South American trade," declared A. J. Harrington, an United States commercial attache at Lima, while speaking before members of the Chamber of Commerce.

"The matter should be expressed in the metric system, otherwise it will prove a poor introduction to goods of American make. Your agent should be on the spot and be indefatigable. He must be well appearing, a hustler, possess tact and judgment, for the average business men in the countries we represent is cultured. It would be well to have a manager employ native salesmen who are familiar with the trade and conditions. Small manufacturers might combine with satisfactory results. Big sales must not be expected right away, because financial conditions are disturbed.

"Credits ought not to frighten producers, because American banks, including the National Shawmut of Boston are about to locate branches in the South American capitals and they should be of assistance to the New England manufacturer," declared V. L. Havens, an attache accredited to Santiago, Chili. "Credits are now principally established in London, greatly to Great Britain's advantage in a trade way. Financial ratings are compiled nearly as carefully in South America as here, particularly on the east coast, where there are several mercantile agencies."

OH! NOT NICE, COLD SHOWERS AT WELLESLEY

The feminine shrieks arising from Wellesley College every morning these Fall days are not, as passers-by might suppose, caused by the discovery of an invading host of mice in the college dormitories.

The "Ohs" and "Ahs," gentle readers, are merely the logical result of all the fair students who wish to make the athletic teams taking the daily ice cold shower bath the training rules prescribe.

Next to giving up fudge and fried foods this is about the worst hardship now being undergone by those who seek to win the coveted "W" at the coming college field day.

The rain came just in time, according to Metropolitan water service officials, for hundreds of gallons of water are turned on each morning at Wellesley these days. Basketball, golf, hockey and tennis players are all taking the Spartan treatment.

Today the class crews will be chosen. Then, tomorrow, there will be more cold water turned on at Wellesley.

The senior captains who are charged with insisting that all their team members take the cold shower are: Basketball, Elizabeth Van Winkle, Rutherford, N. J.; golf, Elizabeth Endel, Netherwood, N. J.; hockey, Eleanor Mason, Syracuse; running, Elizabeth Whelan, New York; tennis, Katherine Rolfe, Albany; archery, Elizabeth Smart, Morristown; crew, Caroline Blackstone, Philadelphia.

The senior running team, just ordered to the training table includes: Mary Hofer, East Boston; Margaret Hungus, Williamsport, Pa.; Marian H. Locke, Wellesley; Helen Merton, Calumet, Mich.; Florence Tenny, Granville, N. Y.; Loretta Traver, Trenton, N. J.; Elizabeth Whelan, New York; Ruth Woods, Worcester. Substitutes, Marian Allison, Brooklyn; Frances Burns, Plymouth; Caroline Miller, Philadelphia; Ruth Tuthill, Waymart, Pa.

ALLIES MUST WIN, SAYS MISS PANKHURST

NEW YORK, Oct. 17.—Miss Christabel Pankhurst, the English militant suffragist, who has just arrives here, declared in an interview today with the AMERICAN that the chief object of her present visit was to aid the cause of the allies.

"I want to interest the people of America in our cause," Miss Pankhurst declared. "The Germans must, and will be, beaten. England will be supreme finally."

Miss Pankhurst will be the principal speaker at a suffrage meeting which is to be held at Carnegie Hall on October 24 by the Women's Political Equality League. Six days later Mrs. Pethick Lawrence, at one time Mrs. Pankhurst's most enthusiastic supporter, will address a militant meeting, which has been arranged by the Women's Political Union, Mrs. Harriott Stanton Blatch's organization.

Miss Pankhurst has been invited to take part in one of the municipal campaigns in Ohio, and she said it was probable she would accept. After leaving New York she intends visiting Chicago. She spent the night at the Martha Washington Hotel, but during the remainder of her stay in this city she will be the guest of friends in Forty-fifth street.

PROF. MUNSTERBERG 'STANDS PAT' ON BOOK

that he will be compelled to leave the United States.

I propose to do my share toward realizing that end, anyhow.

Captain Wiener is a Philadelphian who has for some years lived in this country. Until a few months ago he ran a small news and photograph agency in the Strand.

Mr. Wiener is supposed to live on a liberal allowance made to him by a rich and generous relative named Kettertinus in Philadelphia. He had a considerable fortune some years ago and he may be the prospective heir of his Philadelphia relative, who is a rich lithographer, but those who know Mr. Wiener here do not think that Harvard need worry about the loss of any bequest, whether $10,000,000 or less, he can now make.

Dispatches from Philadelphia quote J. L. Ketterlinus of that city, uncle of Major Weiner, thus:

"That's just like Clarence, but I'm not sure that he has left the $10,000 to leave Harvard. If he is basing his bequest upon a prospective inheritance from me, he will be disappointed. He hasn't that money that I know of. I could not swear that he has more than two cents."

MUNSTERBERG STANDS PAT ON STATEMENT THAT BROUGHT ATTACK

Professor Hugo Munsterberg stands pat.

Though former President Eliot may denounce the Germans and though Wieners and Wieners may pile up their $10,000,000 offers for his resignation, Professor Munsterberg does not propose to recede from the statements which have earned him the attacks of Wieners.

When Professor Munsterberg was asked to comment upon Dr. Eliot's anti-German utterances, he replied: "Dr. Eliot by his recent utterances has aggravated opposition to and misunderstanding of Germany and have called him the leader of the anti-German party in America."

Over at Harvard the students are often involved in hot discussion between Eliot men and Munsterberg men—German and anti-German.

Professor Munsterberg has replied to Wiener's $10,000,000 offer, which was sent on a postal card, by offering his resignation. Harvard will act upon this resignation shortly.

STANDS BY HIS BOOK.

"Let us hope all this will lead to a better understanding of Germany," was Professor Munsterberg's comment on the imbroglio.

"I stand by all I have said—and you will find it all in my book, 'The War and America.'

"The book aims to set forth my arguments for fair play for Germany. Dr. Eliot has spoken of the German and Austrian armies as 'brute forces.' Is the English navy any the less a brute force?"

Dr. Eliot asserts that the Germany of art, education and science is against this war. Dr. Edwin D. Mead of the World Peace Foundation, after weeks of inquiry, believes otherwise.

"I stand on my book. It presents my views. Dr. Eliot and others are entitled to their own opinions."

Professor Munsterberg's book discusses at length the whole underlying causes of the war. His assertion is that it is primarily a war between Germany and Russia, and that France and England have seized the opportunity to destroy Germany.

WIENER TOLD HIS LIFE STORY AT 1900 HARVARD DECENNIAL

In the decennial report of the Harvard class of 1900 issued in 1910 Major Wiener, whose opposition to Professor Muensterberg has brought him into the limelight, gives the following account of his activities since he left college in his sophomore year:

"In 1897, in November, I went to Cuba. In 1898, in August, I went to Porto Rico as first lieutenant and aide-de-camp on General F. D. Grant's staff. In 1899, in November, I went to South Africa as correspondent for the New York Sun.

"Appointed by Chamberlain of the London office, I went to Natal with General Buller, then to Cyphergats with General Bantaro. At Stromberg I led back the remaining eighteen scouts of Captain Montmorency's Victoria Cross Scouts. I was offered eight commissions in the next few days.

"I decided to organize a corps of scouts with Major Driscoll and was placed second in command of this corps—'Driscoll's Scouts.' I was eight times wounded, and in January, 1901, had an independent command of 349 men. Afterwards I was breveted major and second in command of the Prince of Wales Light Horse (Welch regiment of 800).

"I had thirty-six polo ponies in Rome, where I started polo. In the spring of 1904 I drove tandem and three extra horses 2,000 miles through Europe from Rome. In the Spring of 1905 I drove tandem and three extra saddle horses from Rome through Simplon to Geneva, Aix les Bains, Lourcira, Prague, Dresden, Cologne, Linz and Vienna, in all 6,200 miles in four and three-fourths months.

"In the Spring of 1908 I had a houseboat, 109 by 19 feet, finished after two years' building on the Danube. I started from Vienna on June 15 and was tugged by special tug through Hungary and Servia to Turnu Severin in Roumania and returned on the same way to Vienna in October, 1908.

"I had a fatal motor accident on Oct. 27 at Traunstein in Bavaria—the chauffeur and a friend were killed. In May, 1909, I started the Wiener News Agency, Limited, at 64 Strand. This is now the largest news agency in England—we have twenty-eight newspapers in America, twenty-one in England, one in South Africa and ten in Australasia. I write for the North American Review, the Edinburgh Review and occasionally for the syndicate of which I am managing director. We expect to start a daily union newspaper in New York in the autumn and an Anglo-American magazine in the Spring."

Dr. Eliot's War Articles Denounced as Un-Neutral

To the Editor of the Herald.

I have received, during the last month, a number of letters about my letters on the war, published in the New York Times, so considerable that I am quite unable to answer them. The majority of these letters approve my reasonings and my conclusions; but a fair minority condemn them. Most of the latter class are anonymous. From them I select one which, I think, some of your readers may possibly find interesting.

CHARLES W. ELIOT.

Cambridge, October 15.

Doctor Eliot, President Emeritus of Harvard, Cambridge, Mass.

Highly Esteemed Sir: I have read with intense indignation your un-neutral, and, therefore, un-American fulminations.

I have not forgotten any more than other devout Christians your remarks on Christianity.

I have not forgotten that you have stated that no thinking man believes that Christ performed any miracles nor that Christ rose from the dead.

Your insincere war articles are on a par with your blasphemous articles on religion.

Therefore, I say from the bottom of my Christian heart may God Almighty forever damn you and all your descendants.

Denounces Style of High School Girls

WORCESTER, Oct. 17.—"There is at present among girls a daring liberty in dress, in speech, in action," Miss Laura E. Dyer of Dorchester told delegates to the National Congress of Parent-Teacher Associations here. "The age at which a girl enters high school is just the age at which she is most responsive to the spirit of the age. There is a girl problem just as there is a boy problem. Year after year the teacher faces it. No single influence of the age is without its reaction upon our girls."

ITALY SENDS NEW PROTEST TO AUSTRIA

The situation in France, briefly summarized from the dispatches of the past twenty-four hours, is this:

The latest German offensive at Verdun has been checked; near Soissons the British have captured a number of German positions; in the Lassigny and Roye districts the attempts of the Germans to smash the lines of the allies have been frustrated; the Germans have been driven from Lille, which has been occupied by the allies (this repirt is not confirmed).

Fear of a German submarine raid on England is seizing the British public as a result of the latest naval disaster, according to the London correspondent of the AMERICAN.

Not only has England's pride in her naval powers been cut to the quick by the sinking of the Hawke by the German submarine, says the dispatch, but the British people are beginning to wonder if the much vaunted navy can protect the shores of the British Isles.

Persistent reports were current in London today that the British navy has suffered another reverse in addition to the sinking of the Hawke but were quickly denied by the government press bureau.

What is regarded as an ominous turn in the general situation is the reported protest by the Italian government to the Austrian Foreign Office against the flight of an Austrian warship over the Italian border. The Italians fear that the occupants of the airship were bent on military espionage.

OSTEND AND BRUGES TAKEN.

The capture of Ostend and Bruges on the Belgian coast was officially announced by the general staff at Berlin today. The War Office states that German dominance of Belgium is now complete with the exception of the extreme northwest, at Ypres, where, the Germans say, the allies are in considerable force.

One army division, Berlin states, has been left at Antwerp, where Belgians have been promised relief from rush indemnity if the German garrison is provided with food and shelter.

Bordeaux sends a dispatch that the Belgian army under King Albert has escaped into France and is now recuperating upon French soil before joining the offensive against the Germans in co-operation with the French and British troops near the Belgian border.

An important gain for the allies in the operations against Kiao-Chau, the German leasehold in China, is reported unofficially from Pekin. The dispatch says that the Japanese and their British allies in a furious assault have taken Prinz Heinrich Hill, which overlooks Tsing Tao. The Anglo-Japanese losses were 150 killed and wounded. A number of Germans were captured.

Official Reports

GERMAN.

BERLIN, Oct. 17.—Completion of the Belgian campaign of the German army is announced by the general staff with the capture of Bruges and Ostend. The following statement on the Belgian campaign was made:

German Coat of Arms.

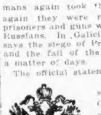
Now that Ostend and Bruges have been taken by us the German campaign in Belgium is completed. We hold all of Belgium and the only point where our control is contested is in the extreme northwestern part (in the vicinity of Ypres) where the enemy (the French and English) has massed a considerable force of men.

The German army is to be congratulated upon its great feats of arms upon Belgium soil. We are retaining one army division, about 20,000 men, in Antwerp. The Belgian people are being encouraged to continue their occupations. Factories are being operated and mines are being worked. The German troops have attempted to explain upon the Belgiums that they are safe so long as they abstain from hostile acts.

RUSSIAN.

PETROGRAD, Oct. 17.—Gigantic onslaughts by the German forces along the battle line in Russian-Poland have been repulsed with severe losses by Russian troops, it is officially announced today. After having been driven back from Warsaw the Germans again took the offensive, but again they were repulsed. Many prisoners and guns were taken by the Russians. In Galicia the statement says the siege of Przemysl continues and the fall of the fortress is only a matter of days.

The official statement says:



Russian Coat of Arms.

Gigantic onslaughts of the German forces along the big battle line in Russian Poland have been repulsed with severe losses to the enemy.

After having been driven back from Warsaw after they had advanced to within eight miles of that city, the Germans from the east and southwest again took the offensive, but every attack made by them was repulsed and they were again driven back.

1,200,000 MEN READY TO FIGHT FOR ENGLAND NOW, SAYS EXPERT

LONDON, Oct. 17.—Colonel Repington, the military expert of the Times, in replying to the Frankfurter Zeitung's statement that Great Britain could raise only 500,000 men, says:

"We have at the present moment exactly double that number, namely 1,200,000 men and the number grows almost faster than we can cope with it. It is our way, as well as that of the United States, to begin to raise our fighting armies after war breaks out, not before. With 1,200,000 at home, the immense army in the field and the hundreds of thousands forming in India, Australia and Canada form a nucleus around which we will continue to build as the war progresses.

"It is only a question of time. It stands to reason that an empire of 400,000,000 can never lack men. This war for us has hardly begun. We have not yet started to fight. Our troops now on the continent are nothing more than an advance guard for our real army which is to follow in the Spring, the remainder of the advance guard will follow and somewhere by the end of 1915 the main body of our troops will come into

BERLIN, WITH THEATRES OPEN, IS AS GAY AS EVER

LONDON, Oct. 17.—The London Times prints the following from a subject of a neutral country who has just returned from Germany:

"I did not hear any boasting over German successes. When I spoke to Germans of their victories, they would reply: 'Yes, we have had victories, but what of the Allies' losses?'

"In Berlin all the theatres are open and attracting audiences. I went to a theatre on the night of the fall of Antwerp. In the middle of one scene someone stepped on the stage

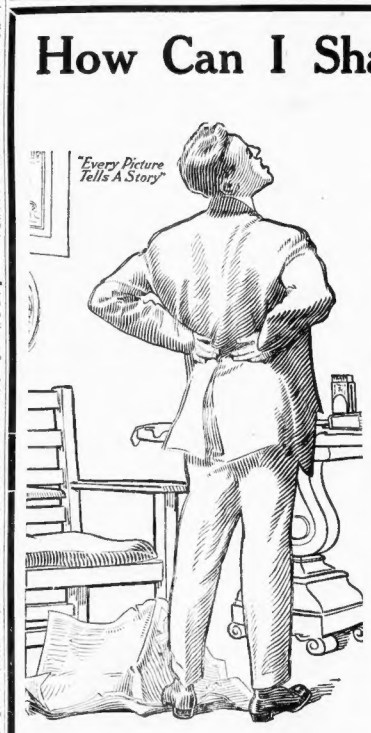
ASK TRUCE IN WAR FOR CHRISTMAS DAY

NEW YORK, Oct. 17.—Cardinal Farley, Bishop David H. Greer of the Episcopal diocese of New York and Rabbi H. Peries Mendes of the Jewish synagogue, are among the leaders in a movement to induce all the belligerents to allow a truce on Christmas Day.

Bishop Greer said details of the plan would be worked out, but that probably, if the movement met with the expected support all creeds and denominations the proposal for a Christmas armistice would be made through President Wilson or the State Department at Washington. The object of the plan has not as yet advanced far enough in detail to be presented to the President.

Dr. Mendes said: "At this moment the great powers are intoxicated with the drunkenness of war and will not listen to the clergy nor to our President nor to anybody. But next year, when the expected end is in sight, identified with peace on earth to men of good will."

How Can I Shake Off This Backache?



That sharp twinge in the back—that dull aching pain may indicate weak kidneys, and kidney weakness is too dangerous to neglect. It is the slight kidney troubles that develop into dropsy, gravel and fatal Bright's disease, and 100,000 people die in this country every year of Bright's disease.

If your back is bad and the passages of the urine too frequent or scanty, suspect the kidneys. If headaches, dizzy spells, nervous troubles or rheumatism bother you, don't delay. Rest your kidneys by taking things easier, eating lightly and keeping regular hours. And, to strengthen and tone up the kidneys, use Doan's Kidney Pills. Why? Let your own townspeople tell you.

BOSTON PEOPLE ANSWER:

METROPOLITAN AVENUE

E. Schoepflin, 47 Metropolitan Ave., Boston, says: "I was laid-up with heavy backache and pains through my kidneys. I had severe pains in the top of my head, too, and felt miserable. I began taking Doan's Kidney Pills and got relief. I wasn't troubled for quite a while. Then the aches and pains returned and I again used Doan's Kidney Pills. They fixed me up in good shape in a short time."

EMERSON ST. (S. Boston)

Mrs. H. G. Gottlieb, 39 Emerson St., S. Boston, says: "For years I suffered from kidney trouble. Often my back was so lame I couldn't straighten without having sharp twinges across my loins that made me cry out with pain. At night my rest was disturbed and I got up in the morning very nervous. Nothing I took seemed to help me until I began using Doan's Kidney Pills. They brought me instant relief. Now whenever I have an attack of kidney trouble I use Doan's Kidney Pills and am all right in a few days."

GARFIELD AVE. (Woburn)

Mrs. C. E. Kimball, 8 Garfield Ave., Woburn, Mass., says: "I had an attack of La Grippe some time ago and after that I felt miserable. I suffered from rheumatic pains in my back which were so bad I could hardly get out of a chair. The muscles in my right leg drew up and often prevented me from walking. The kidney secretions were in bad shape. A friend told me about Doan's Kidney Pills and I got a supply. They brought good results in a week and two boxes cured me. I am glad to say that the cure has been permanent."

HALL ST. (W. Somerville)

P. Smith, 15 Hall St., W. Somerville, Mass., says: "Several months ago I suffered from rheumatic pains in the small of my back. At night I didn't rest well and in the morning I was all tired out, and many a day I simply dragged myself around and had to neglect my work. Knowing of the wonderful cures Doan's Kidney Pills had made, I decided to use them myself. I got relief from the first few doses and two boxes completely cured me."

COMMERCIAL STREET

J. F. Kelly, prop. plumbing shop, 392 Commercial St., Boston, says: "My kidney trouble came on from a strain. Often in walking down stairs I would get a crick in my back and it caused me to holler. I was so bad that I was laid up in bed for sixteen weeks. I had severe dizzy spells. No one knows how I suffered from backache. The doctor treated me, but didn't do me much good, and when I told him I was going to try Doan's Kidney Pills he said they were all right. Three boxes permanently cured me."

BROOKS ST. (E. Boston)

Mrs. Lillian Nichols, 109 Brooks St., East Boston, says: "Off and on for four or five years I was troubled by my kidneys and bladder. I had severe pains across my loins. I was also caused much annoyance by the kidney secretions. My housework was a burden, owing to the pains in my back. Finally a friend told me to try Doan's Kidney Pills and I got a box. They made me feel like a different woman. I wouldn't be without this remedy in the house now."

TRAGIC LIFE STORY OF MILDRED SULLIVAN, 'BELLE OF AROOSTOOK'

State and county officials in Maine are still hard at work, searching for Mildred Sullivan, dead or alive.

The disappearance of the "Belle of Aroostook County" has proved to be one of the most puzzling mysteries in the history of the Pine Tree State.

Parents and townspeople generally realize that for a school girl of seventeen to disappear as swiftly and effectually as an apparition, is unusual and uncanny.

That accounts for the intense interest in the case. The AMERICAN today prints the fourth instalment of a narrative embracing the life of the Houlton girl and a comprehensive summary of the tragedy based on a full and painstaking investigation by a staff reporter who was on the scene a fortnight.

CHAPTER FOUR.

Mildred was busy sweeping one day last Fall when a young man, tall and bronzed, came to the door. He said he heard Mrs. Sullivan had a room to let. Mrs. Sullivan was impressed with the stranger. He had a good looking face and a frank expression. He was well dressed. Mrs. Sullivan asked him about himself and his home. She learned that he was a native of Milo and that his name was Ambrose Bridge. He said he had a married sister in Houlton.

"I've just got a job up at the fertilizer works," said the stranger and I want a room handy and a place to board."

"I guess we can accommodate you," said Mrs. Sullivan, and Ambrose Bridge became one of the Sullivan household. He had the run of the house. He sat in the parlor. He was like one of the family. He had a winning way and he was good looking enough to be popular with all the girls. In fact it has since developed that Ambrose has been quite a "heart-breaker," if the people of Houlton and Presque Isle are to be believed.

But the singular feature is that Mildred Sullivan loathed him from the first glance. She told her mother so and her aunts and cousins. She disliked him so much that last Winter she told her mother she preferred to go back to Hammond plantation and live with her grandmother and attend the district school with her Aunt Helen.

Mildred remained with us all Winter," said Mrs. Carpenter, the grandmother. "She went home occasionally, but she told us she could not stay while Ambrose Bridge was there. We never thought much about her dislike for Bridge. We put it down as a girlish whim, and to think that he has turned out to be the central figure in this horror.

"That is one of the most astonishing features to me. I cannot explain it. We cannot understand how and when he managed to overcome her hatred and how, as he has admitted to the authorities to save himself, he ever won the confidence of the child, for poor Millie was nothing but a child after all, and as good-living and obedient a girl as ever saw the light of day.

"Nobody of Letter H or in Houlton could point a finger at her. She was not around galavanting like other girls of her age. She did not care for boys. We never knew of her having a beau like most girls of her age. She spent most of her time with me or at home with her mother, and my daughter Helen, who is her aunt, and a year younger, was her bosom companion.

"You can imagine our surprise, therefore, when the county attorney and deputy sheriff told us of the part that Ambrose Bridge played in this affair. Mildred's mother and all of us think that Bridge should have been arrested, but the officials told us he made a clean breast of everything to them and that they need his story to clinch the case of the others.

"But it was Bridge that caused it all and he should be made to suffer. We find him to be a same old role, turning traitor on the others to save himself. I suppose the State will need him as a witness, but that is small satisfaction to Millie's parents."

Last Spring Mildred returned to find Ambrose Bridge still a lodger at her home, and popular with the rest of the family. Mr. Mrs. Sullivan treated him like a son, although Bridge is thirty-three and almost as old as Millie's father.

During the Summer the worldwise young man from Milo managed by his graces and attentions to batter down Mildred's antipathy which, in the light of what followed, appeared to have been prompted by a natural sense of protection. Bridge left the fertilizer works and became a lineman for the telephone company. This kept him away much. The line crews had to stay where they found themselves at night and often did not get home until the week end.

Meanwhile Millie and Ambrose had been seen together on the street and at the "movies" and neighbors put it down as a "match." But Millie's folks didn't, not one of them, they never dreamed of such a thing, they said, and they scouted since in their assertion. On the contrary they appear to have regarded Ambrose as Millie's protector and almost like an older brother, he had been so close to the family.

Wanted Girl to Attend the Fair

He was the last man in the world they expected in whose company the girl would meet ineilt or harm, they explained. That was why when Ambrose telephoned from Presque Isle on fair week that he wanted Mildred to come over and attend the fair, nothing was thought of it. But right there Millie's mother erred and she realizes it now, although she and everybody else in the household say they thought Millie would surely stop with her aunt, Mrs. Fred Melville, who lives on a large potato farm on the outskirts of Presque Isle.

In fact it appears from the evidence already in the possession of the government that Mildred had every intention of stopping with her aunt and attending the fair during the day with Bridge, but that the alleged conspirators had carefully arranged a plot of which she was the unsuspecting and innocent victim.

On September 1, Bridge, who is also known in that territory as "Briggs," and who was so called for days by the authorities investigating Mildred's disappearance, telephoned three times for Millie. Her relatives say he seemed terribly anxious to find her and to have her join him at Presque Isle. They can see these things now, but at the time they detected nothing abnormal in his conduct.

When Bridge called first Millie was at her grandmother's, but he sought her on the wire when she got home.

"It's Ambrose, ma," said Mildred after conversing with the young lineman over the wire. "He wants me to attend the fair with him at Presque Isle. It is to last four days and I can stay at auntie's. May I go?"

"Yes, child, but hurry with the dishes now," and Mildred, the old spirit kindling in her eyes, sang and whistled snatches of popular melodies as she attended to her household duties.

To be continued Monday.

Grandmother Defends Girl

Nobody in Houlton could point a finger at her. She did not care for boys. We never knew of her having a beau like most girls of her age. She spent most of her time with me or at home with her mother. — Mrs. Carpenter, grandmother of Mildred Sullivan.

First Symphony Concert Superb Despite the War

By FREDERICK JOHNS.

That the assembling of the Boston Symphony Orchestra from all parts of Europe despite the war and mobilizations is little short of a miracle, did not seem to impress the audience at the opening concert yesterday, for the reception concert yesterday, for the reception concert yesterday. Muck and his men was nothing beyond the ordinary greeting at an opening concert.

The orchestra is practically intact. Two of the eight bass fiddles are missing, but that was expected by the second concert. In one or two other positions it has also been necessary to make substitutions of men who are in military service.

The program was begun with Beethoven's Eroica Symphony, a work inspired by the greatness of Napoleon, and composed by the greatest musician of all time. It undoubtedly was placed upon the program because of the immensity of events now occurring in Europe. To most of the orchestra the second movement, the funeral march, was a most poignant and appropriate number and it was exquisitely played.

The Don Juan Tone Poem of Richard Strauss, written when this composer still had melodic ideas and his penchant for noise had not developed into a mania, was played with all the gusto which Doctor Muck knows how to instill into an orchestra.

The Brahms Variations upon a Haydn theme were played with equal artistry, but to me they are very dull. The dainty Overture to Weber's Euryanthe completed the program.

The playing of the orchestra was superb, despite the fact that it is the first concert and that war has laid its finger upon all.

SMITH SAYS HE WILL TROUNCE "HO HO" AGAIN

By JACK CONWAY.

"GUNBOAT" SMITH still claims he is the classiest heavyweight in the world, even though he recently lost on a foul to Georges Carpentier in a bout decided in London. The gunner contends that the Frenchman's victory was a fluke and that he would have been knocked out if he had not been aided by the honorable referee.

Jim Buckley, Smith's esteemed manager, believes that his protege has a little something on the other big men in his class. This is the reason why he matched the American white heavyweight champion to battle Sam Langford at the Atlas A. A. next Tuesday night.

Langford is recognized as the greatest heavyweight in the world today, barring Jack Johnson. He has won the majority of his ring tussles with apparent ease, and many close followers of the glove game believe that he would be able to vanquish Johnson.

Smith and Langford met in this city last November and the former tar was declared a winner after twelve rugged rounds of fighting. The bout was fairly even, but there was not any denying that Smith was entitled to the decision. His long lay-off handed another to hold "Ho Ho" at bay and he had a comfortable margin in the favor when the last shot had been fired.

SMITH'S victory has been discredited by the Langford camp, who assert that a draw would have been a proper verdict. There are many flight fans who claim that Langford's downfall was caused by his poor physical condition and that he is a far better fighter than the white man, provided he is fit.

The winner of the heavyweight championship is so certain that he is Sam's master that he signed for another skirmish with the "Boston Crusher." He asserts that he will win more easily next Tuesday evening as he is accustomed to the Cambridge negro's style of milling.

THE contest should help to clear up the heavyweight muddle. If Smith wins, he will be in a position to again talk terms with Jack Johnson. But if Sam breezes in a winner, he will be the undisputed successor to the "Tar Baby" and will again start on the trail of Johnson, whom he has been chasing with but little success for these many years.

LANGFORD will enter the ring a favorite in the betting. His recent victories over "Kid" Lafond and Colin Bell and his showing in his bout with Battling Johnson has convinced many "fans" that he carries too many guns for Smith. We do not consider Langford one bit a fighter as he was four or five years ago, but even now he seems to have a little something on the rest of the big fellows.

JOE FARREN, the rugged East Boston welterweight, is ready for action again. Jan Kelly matched Joe recently performed in Philadelphia where he gave Tommy O'Keefe a slashing battle. Joe seems to get better the more he fights and is capable of giving a good account of himself against their leading New England welterweights. He would like to get a match with Jan Kelly at 142 pounds, while he says that he is also desirous of securing a tussle with Young Butler.

EDDIE MACK'S "stable" of boxers is ready for action again. Eddie's star glove mashers are Joe Chick, Terry Brooks and Jan Kelly. The latter will get busy within the next few days at the Atlas A. A. next Tuesday night when he will mingle with "Young" Jasper in an eight-round bout. Kelly almost usually puts up a satisfactory contest.

THE St. Louis referee who had Jack Dillon arrested for receiving money under false pretenses will now protect the latter. Jack Dillon was scheduled to box "K. O." Brown at Indianapolis, but refused to enter the ring until he received $500. The contest was a burlesque and the referee ordered Brown and had Dillon placed in a stout house for safe keeping. It looks as though something was done to make these setter-backers do a little real fighting. Dillon and Brown are matched about once each month and are being forced to stage real battles or they clash within the hemp ropes. They do not seem amicable, which Langford and Jeanette have worked so many years to set up. Sam and Joe never seem to usually give a good account of themselves, although their recent battle has not been nearly as good as the ones which they engaged when they both were in their prime.

THE boxing game is having tough sledding in Pittsburgh. It was necessary to pass around the hat at one of the "Smoke Talks" held the other night. Matches between third raters who do not know the elements of the boxing game is the cause of the decline of the sport in Pittsburgh. Bouts between good performers who are evenly matched draw well almost anywhere.

THE management of the Lakeside A. C. of Webster writes that Fred Yelle and "Young" Lustig will probably meet in the opening show of the club, which will be held on November 2. These boys are classed among the leading lightweights in the East.

TECH PLAN FOR OPENING NEW ATHLETIC FIELD

The Institute of Technology has built a new athletic track which is probably not equalled by any in the world.

This track has been built in the northeast corner of the land owned by the Institute at Cambridge, and close to the junction of Main and Vassar streets.

The track is one-quarter mile with two turns, each turn being about 340 feet long and the sides being about 315 feet. The track is on an axis of about northwest and southeast.

It is twenty feet in width throughout its entire length, and on the east side is twenty-eight feet wide, corresponding to a 220-yard straightaway of this width.

The south straightaway allows for six hurdles to be placed abreast. Provision is also made on this 220-yard straightaway for the start of a 440-yard run with one turn, and for an 880-yard run with three turns, the finish being on the west side of the track.

HOW TRACK IS LOCATED.

Within the track is the football gridiron, the axis being placed rather easterly of the centre of the field, so that the side line of the gridiron is twenty feet from the side of the track.

Within the north curve of the track is a pole vault path 133 feet long and twenty feet wide, with pits fifteen feet in depth at each end.

Between the west side of the football gridiron and the track is placed at the north a high jump path seventy-five feet long, twenty feet wide, with pits twelve feet deep. To the south of this is a broad jump with a path 150 feet long, pits ten feet wide and fifteen feet deep.

Fred W. Rubien of New York, well known in athletic affairs, and architect of many tracks, has drawn the final plans for the track, with the system of drainage, while the practical work and selection of cinders for the track has been under the direction of Mr. Robertson of New York.

SHOT-PUT AND DISCUS RINGS.

In the southwest corner inside the track is a shot-put ring, and outside the track, near the southwest corner, is a hammer-throw ring with cage of special construction for M. I. T., with 12½ degrees starting, so placed that it is impossible to throw the hammer on to the track.

On the opposite corner, outside the track, is placed a discus ring. All these places for weight events are of similar construction to the track, except that the surface is a mixture of clay, loam and cinders.

On the west side of the track is a spectators' stand, the height of which is 17 seven feet, giving a good view to every spectator could see as well as the referee there wouldn't be so much congestion.

THERE was one good point about the meeting that should serve as a guide for some of the bodies here that have boxing commissions. The referees got together on many tangled points and agreed in the future to decide all of them alike. One excellent thing they agreed to bar was striking with the open glove, a practice that has become common in this country as well. Another was to keep all of the seconds quiet during the progress of the contest. It was agreed to count points all of the seconds with the knuckles and to subject a boxer to disqualification unless his seconds were silent during the boxing period.

* * *

IF was further agreed that unless a man scoring a knockdown should step back and keep away from the fallen man he should be liable to disqualification. Further, before starting a contest, it was the duty of the referee to find out which of the seconds is in charge of the corner and to pay attention only to him when it comes to giving up the contest, throwing in the sponge or the towel.

* * *

SEVERAL boxers in Australia showed a trick of catching the referee with one hand and swinging violently with the other at an opponent, the impetus thus gained telling in several cases. It was agreed to stop this practice entirely. Frequent clinching and the act of holding and hitting are to be dealt with severely. It was agreed to desert from a man's score of points when he shall be caught deliberately holding.

* * *

THE referees became greatly enthused over their meeting and to such an extent that they even went further than they should have done and started in to make rules themselves. They agreed to bar the kidney punch, which they called inelegant and not boxing, and also suggested that the blow known as the "rabbit killer" should also be barred. This punch is a downward sweep to the back of the neck, delivered usually with a man's forearm or side of the fist, largely unprotected by padding. It was brought into use by Milburn Saylor, and with it the Indiana star knocked out several men in Australia.

* * *

SAYLOR used it with great effect on men who were inclined to clinch and hang on. But the referees decided that it was unscientific and ugly and therefore decided to bar it. Many suggestions were made to stop clinching, but none of them was found sufficient. One referee went as far as to say that a man knocked down twice during a contest should be declared the loser, but the others did not agree with him.

Food for Sport Fans

BY GEORGE E. PHAIR

It is said that Jim Gilmore is trying to get Charley Somers into the Federal League, just as if Charley hasn't enough trouble on his hands.

The fact that an Irishman will referee the soccer game between England and Scotland is a sign that there will be no partiality. He doesn't care which side loses.

The Cubans evidently have developed a lot of fortitude. In spite of the report that Johnson and Willard will fight there, they have not started a revolution.

ROOM TO RENT.

Has lots of room for it.

Jim Flynn threatens to go to Australia, leading one to suspect that he has had a falling out with Carl Morris.

Judging from the mangled condition of some of those Russian names the German artillery must be creating terrible havoc.

THE USUAL THING.

Chip knocked out Billy Murray,
But did not cause a flurry.

Chip probably has satisfied himself that he can whip Murray, but everybody else was satisfied long ago.

Georges Carpentier has suddenly recovered from his serious injury. Evidently he had the same doctor who cured the Crown Prince when he was killed.

REFEREES ADOPT UNIFORM RING RULES IN AUSTRALIA

By ED. W. SMITH.

AUSTRALIAN referees blamed the public not so long back for demonstrations that occurred after some decisions that weren't popular. The referees said that the public did not understand the system of deciding contests and therefore hooted and hissed when the decisions were made.

It was suggested that the referees get together, decide upon the system of deciding contests that went the limit of twenty rounds, and then, by pronouncing their ideas, give the public the real inside of their system.

* * *

THE meeting was held and was given a great deal of attention in the sporting papers of Australia, so in fact, that it should be no cause for complaint by the public. The fight fan who goes to a battle now knows just exactly on what basis the referee is working. But of course, the fight fan, who is a good many feet from the ring, cannot see as well as the referee, who is working right on top of the men in the ring. He cannot see all of the finer points of the game, and is at least never out of his cases cannot be expected to know whether a likely looking point has scored or has gone into the mind of the referee as a miss. That always has been the bugbear of referees. If every spectator could see as well as the referee there wouldn't be so much complaint.

PACKEY STILL INSISTS HE IS A LIGHTWEIGHT

By ED. CURLEY.

Packey McFarland will still persist in getting his name in the papers. Packey is out with a declaration that he is going to return to the ring and save the country's honor by retrieving the lightweight title which Freddie Welsh eased away from Willie Ritchie a few months ago. Like Kelly is.

Packey adds that he can easily make 135 pounds at 3 o'clock as easy as Jerry wrote a note. Like Kelly can.

Packey was married a few months ago, and on the happy day announced he was through fighting. Why he wants to do his fighting in the ring now we fail to understand, for we know some men that are their own bosses, some, not many.

We don't blame Packey a whit for keeping the public informed that he is still alive, for there is still a great interest taken in his doings, as Patricio was one of the cleverest boxers that ever donned gloves. Dunning gloves, regular stuff.

Our disagreement with Packey is that he can't make 135 pounds any day of the week nor any week of the year. The last time he dawdled in New York was when he pasted Tommy Murphy around for thirty minutes at the Garden, and Packey was then heavier than 135 pounds. Again he has reached the stage where age and opulence will rebel at removing flesh.

Our advice, tendered free gratis, is for Packey to take on a few pounds and battle some of the many middleweight champions for that much coveted title. Again, he be worth some real dough—enough to keep the wolf away from the garage—all he has to do is to make sassy faces at Mike Gibbons and get the latter's goat, and he will bring it about. That would be some battle, for it would be a meeting of two real ring wizards.

As for tackling Freddie Welsh, lay off, Jay Bee, and don't bother the champion while he is earning soft dough playing to S. R. O. in show houses on the Western circuit.

$600 PER GAME FOR JOHNSON IF HE JOINS FEDS

By BILL BAILEY.

Can you imagine a physical giant, with arms like steel, standing on the slab, hurling the ball with the speed of a cannon ball, and receiving near every time that the great whip encircles his head?

It does require a strong imagination, but that is exactly what Walter Johnson, the speed boy, will receive if he signs the Senators' generous offer tendered him by the Brooklyn club of the Federal League.

Outside the efforts to keep the amount of the offer a secret, it is said that Johnson has been offered $600 a year for three years if he will leave the crew of Griffith and join that of the wrong end of the bridge. More than that, Johnson has the offer under consideration. Should he sign, he will be told to you by the officials of the third league, by Johnson himself and by Clark Griffith. Twenty-five thousand is to be placed to Johnson's credit the moment he signs a contract.

And, knowing this, cases were kept upon the great pitcher as he stepped to the mound in a recent game at Chicago, which he eventually won in thirteen innings, 6 to 1.

Not that Johnson pitch as he did in this game and let him twirl in forty games of nine innings each, which is quite a master's work, and every time that he hurls a ball he receives $417, to be exact.

Johnson was timed for the nine innings. Which certainly is fair for the distance in which he will pitch, but eight will offset any extra inning pitched that he may work. On the occasion mentioned he was in exceptionally good form, which meant that he used pitch more balls. That may seem a paradox, but it isn't. In the nine innings thirty Chicago batters faced him, and he pitched a total of 125 balls. That's an average of four and a half to the man. Now to explain the paradox. Johnson fanned seven of the White Sox in the regulation game, which meant that he must pitch at least three strikes to each. Very few were effective, the Sox would have hit before they swung at them, and it would have been an easier afternoon for the master.

Now, if the great Walter collects $3,000 for a season's work, it's pretty near a certainty that he will average $600 per game. Because even a man of Walter's strength won't pitch every time that he may be called upon, he is considerably more, but it will be as a relief pitcher.

Harvard Varsity Crews Row Dead Heat on Charles

The two Harvard varsity eights raced a dead heat on the Charles over a mile course. In his division of the first string men Coach Jim Wray split the squad with a view to making the two boats as nearly equal in strength as possible.

Harwood, a varsity oarsman of last year, set the beat for one of the eights, and Brown, the freshman captain of last Spring, stroked Crew B, the boat in which Captain Harry A. Murray was seated.

Neither crew hit up to any high mark during the short race down the Charles, the average stroke throughout being about 28.

5 TEAMS SIGN FOR SIX DAYS' BIKE RACE HERE

Five teams have been signed up for the six-day bike race at the Arena and before the end of the week it is expected that a record field will have signed contracts.

The early list shows many new riders as well as a number of old favorites and from the present outlook the New England bike fans are sure to witness one of the best events of this kind ever run off.

The timber for the track, which was selected from the best of the lumber by an expert stock picker, is being shipped by special freight from the West and as due at the Arena early next week and work will begin at once.

Several of the riders have been in training at the Brighton Beach Velodrome for several days, but it is expected that some of them will pitch their tents at the Revere cycle track and work out there.

The race meet will open with a series of motor paced and sprint matches on Saturday night, October 21, while the six-day grind will start on Monday afternoon, November 2.

The programme calls for eight hours of racing each day and the men will start at 4 o'clock in the afternoon and continue until 2 o'clock the following morning.

By TED PARKE.

For the first time in twenty-seven years Harvard and Tufts meet on the gridiron this afternoon, the field of battle being the Stadium, and for a renewal of relations, Tufts does seem to have chosen the opportune time, from the standpoint of the Medford boys.

Seldom has Tufts been able to put a better eleven on the field of battle than this year. With a team practically the same as last year's aggregation, regarded as one of the best ever representing the Brown and Blue, the prospects for humbling the Crimson seem peculiarly bright.

On the other hand and directly in line with the thought just expressed, seldom has Harvard had a season of so many mishaps.

CRIMSON FAR BELOW AVERAGE.

Injuries and sickness have followed close on the heels of the Crimson players, so that hardly had the season started when the Cambridge eleven, of which so much was predicted before the season opened, found itself in a badly dilapidated state.

Not only did this detract from actual strength of the eleven, considered man for man, but it retarded and is still retarding seriously the development of the machine.

Today Harvard enters the lists with an eleven which a constant follower of the Crimson would hardly recognize, so greatly has it changed in personelle.

The Crimson has not been strong in substitutes, with the natural result that the eleven which will represent the Cambridge University will be far below the standard usually turned out by Coach Haughton.

As a matter of fact there will only be one regular missing in the line, namely Pennock, but for the last several years, the great fighting strength of the Harvard team has lain back of the line in the halfbacks and the fullback.

BACK LINE IN BAD SHAPE.

In addition a sub quarter will be the chief tactician for Harvard, and while he is fast developing into a seasoned player, he still lacks a great deal of experience, and he does not know the abilities of his team as does Logan, the regular general.

A substitute backfield of little punch is scheduled to start the contest for Harvard. Rollins will be at left half. He is a clever runner in an open field, and is probably put in the game to take the Place as far as possible of Mohan, as he can also punt when called upon. Whitney is also a fast man, but lacks experience, while McKinlock, while a hard line hitter, is guilty of the fault of starting slow and failing to pick his holes quickly, which frequently minimizes his value greatly.

EXCELS AT LONG PASSES.

The Tufts backfield quartette and wings are fully as good as any other set of like composition in the country. Stankard and Bennett are fast under kicks and let little get by them, while Angell, Hadley and Westcott work well together, supplying perfect interference for the man carrying the ball, and combined supply every requisite of a fast backfield in hard line hitting, fast end running and clean, clever and skillful exposition of the open game, namely the forward pass.

It is to be doubted whether there is any man on the gridiron today who can compare with Captain Angell of Tufts in hurling the ball long distances with such accuracy as that which he has at his command.

He frequently tosses the ball fifty yards, the distance of a healthy punt, while either of his teammates to the backfield, or the quarterbacks of the ends, generally have it changed in personelle.

Tufts strong game is the open formation, and the best results can only be obtained from this style of play, on a dry field and with a dry ball.

WAITING GAME FOR CRIMSON.

In this respect, then, the weather militates against the Visitors and detracts somewhat from the strength which they otherwise might show, and by such the amount which it detracts from the Tufts strength, it adds to the Harvard strength.

For Harvard, with a weakened eleven, one which cannot hope to compete with any consistent degree of success with a line practically as strong as its own, is determined to play the defence waiting game, and play for the breaks in the luck. This contention seems to be borne out by the withholding of the regular Harvard backfield from the line-up.

While the Crimson backfield quartette as it now lines up, composed of Logan, Hardwick, Mahon and Brauher, is not entitled to the best fighting shape, they could be put in on a pinch, and it would not be at all surprising to see them rushed into the game, if an opportunity presents itself where, with a little added punch, a score may be credited to the Crimson.

With a very muddy, slippery field, however, it would seem logical for Haughton to spare his men, for he needs them badly later on.

BIG YEAR FOR TUFTS TEAM.

In the old style rushing game there is little to choose between the two teams. Therefore, with Tufts' team partially pulled by reason of the conditions for the best results to be obtained through the medium of the open game, there is little reason to say that either eleven has it on its own way.

With a substitute backfield in the game for Harvard, Tufts will have a better opportunity to execute some of its skillful forward passes, than otherwise, for the Crimson sub-backs have had little experience with the play, and know little enough about breaking it.

This has been evident with some of the regulars in the game, the past two Saturdays.

Tufts has had a uniformly good season, two weeks ago taking into camp by the overwhelming score of 61 to 7 the Bates team, which the previous saturday Harvard defeated 41 to 0.

Last week Tufts administered a crushing defeat to Colby, the strongest of the Maine elevens, 40 to 13.

NEW TACKLE TRIED OUT.

The presence of the scores against Tufts in both of these games, however, points out the defective feature of the Brown and Blue, a not too strong defence, and it is on that Harvard is relying in a degree today.

An interesting development in the ranks of the Crimson is the trial of Francke, a big 190-pound candidate for tackle, in the backfield.

Apparently Coach Haughton feels the need of some big fellow, whom he can rush into the game in place of Captain Brickley.

His trying out in the backfield will do him no harm, even if he does not come up to expectations, for it will serve to quicken him up and he can be quickly shifted back to the line, where he will unquestionably be valuable as a tackle, in which material Harvard is this year weak.

Boston and Bowdoin College Gridiron Stars in Maine Game

The Boston College eleven meets the Bowdoin College combination today. This is the first time that a Maroon and Gold eleven has faced Bowdoin and the followers of the local team expect a good showing.

Sullivan, the big fullback, is out of the game with an injured leg and Fitzgerald, the end, dislocated his elbow against Rhode Island last week and will be unable to play today. Bradley is back after two weeks' lay off with injuries and will be called upon to fill Sullivan's shoes.

Oldring Weds, Facing Desertion Charges

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 17.—Reuben N. Oldring, left fielder of the Philadelphia American League baseball team, and Miss Hannah A. Thomas of Bridgeton, N. J., have just been married by a magistrate here.

Oldring is under bail to answer charges of desertion and non-support preferred against him by a Wilkesbarre, Pa., woman shortly before the opening of the World's Series games with the Boston Nationals. He denied a prior marriage to the license clerk.

Whitney Ships His Horses Back

LONDON, Oct. 17.—Inasmuch as horse racing is virtually at an end in England, Harry Payne Whitney is shipping his stable back to the United States from his farm at Newmarket. The first shipment leaves today and the horses include Harmonica and the best yearlings produced since the stable was brought over here.

YALE FAVORED BY WET FIELD IN GAME TODAY

NEW HAVEN, Oct. 17.—Notre Dame and Yale will play today's game in a sea of mud unless the sun comes out red hot within the next few hours.

Coach James Harper of Notre Dame said today that the rain would be to the advantage of Yale. "Yale will do considerable backward passing and the mud will not interfere with that, while it will hamper our forward passing and the — NEW Boy—Falls passes, on which we depend."

Yale will start the game with a veteran lineup. Hinkley has been preparing for bad weather and for the last few days a brief practice in passing a water-soaked ball has been held. While in the practice yesterday the ball was greased to make it doubly slippery.

The Notre Dame squad, consisting of twenty-six men, kept indoors. They held an hour's practice in the Yale baseball cage, where things went well in the passing and signal work.

There is little betting on the game, although Notre Dome brought several thousand dollars along. The visitors took odds which the Yale men do not care to give.

Rain May Call Off Lexington Races

LEXINGTON, Ky., Oct. 17.—Rain again fell early today and the prospects for completing the racing program are not good. In the event that racing today is not possible, all events with the exception of the trotting and pacing divisions of the championship stallion stake will be declared off.

The stallion stake will be raced off as soon as the track is in condition. Several express cars of horses left for Dallas and more will go today and tomorrow.

Women Will Have Own Fencing League

NEW YORK, Oct. 17.—Women fencers are soon to have a National organization of their own.

They have decided to organize and conduct their own championship tournaments, not that they find any fault with the way the Amateur Fencers' League of America managed their competitions, but because the A. F. L. A. has been unwillingly obliged to drop all tournaments for women from its annual list of events.

ARLINGTON AND SOMERVILLE IN CROSS COUNTRY

The Somerville High cross-country team will race the Arlington High School national champions today between the halves of the Arlington-Milton gridiron battle. Though this is Somerville's first year at the hill-and-dale game, the group of men competing for their school is a worthy foe and may hand out a surprise to Coach Billy McCarthy's protegés.

Arlington, greatly weakened by the loss of two such men as Gaylord Goldsmith and "Spin" Wunderlich, is, notwithstanding, out once more for the scholastic championship.

The defending team will consist of Captain Kimball, Bidwell, "Ken" Peabody, Collins, Bodwitzer, Jardine, Adams, Kemp, Young and Cameron.

Men who will run in the first dual cross-country run of the Somerville High School are Captain Hall, Carpenter, Lanthier, Frenchi, Pearson, Douglass, Frisbie, Hogan, Spining, Ryder, Bennett, Brimming.

Braves' Stars Play Today in New York

NEW YORK, Oct. 17.—Hank Gowdy, former Giant, who starred in the World's Series, and whose hitting was instrumental in the defeat of the Athletics by the Braves, will make his best appearance of the season on a ball game at Lennox Oval this afternoon.

Gowdy, George Tyler, Josh Devore, the former Giant; Deal, who did well in "Mogul" Stallings place at third in the World's Series, and Joe Connolly, the Boston star outfielder, will play against McMahon Brook Lincoln team in the second game of the doubleheader.

The rest of the team will be composed of major and minor league talent.

Date Set for Clabby Go.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 17.—It was announced today that the Jimmy Clabby-George Chip battle for middleweight championship honors has been set for November 9. Clabby will box for San Francisco tomorrow, according to a letter from his manager in Chicago.

Javelin and Discus Added to Fixtures for College Meet

The javelin and discus throwing will be features of the next interscholastic track and field championship meeting, according to a well-defined report in athletic circles.

For some time collegiate devotees of these events have endeavored to induce the Intercollegiate A. A. A. A. authorities to list the javelin and discus fixtures with the other championship contests, but their efforts were unavailing until a year ago, when the late James E. Sullivan advocated their recognition.

Another event under consideration by the A. A. A. is the hop, step and jump, but this contest has not been looked upon with much favor, and probably will not be added to the championship list.

SHRUBB WANTS MORE RUNNERS FOR CRIMSON

Unless interest is renewed in cross country at Harvard the chances for the sport to remain on the Crimson category of competitive sports is doubtful.

With one of the finest coaches in the country, Alfred Shrubb, the English professional runner, and with an excellent record, the candidates for places on the cross-country team have constantly dwindled, until this Fall there is a score of men and practically for the runs with Cornell, Princeton and Yale.

Shrubb has beaten Cornell two years running, a feat hitherto thought impossible, and has always finished high up in the intercollegiate runs, winning in 1912.

Less than a dozen freshmen have reported so far this Fall and the prospects for both varsity and yearling teams are far from bright because of this lack of interest.

Coach Shrubb declares:

"Harvard certainly should have a top-notch cross country team year in and year out. The material is here if one can only get the men out. Give me a squad of forty freshmen annually and I will guarantee to turn out teams that will hold their own with the best in the colleges world.

"I have a very good varsity squad this Fall as far as fighting, dependable runners are concerned, but let one or two of the men strike an injury and there is no efficient substitute for the unturned absentee."

A canvass of the freshman dormitories is to be made in order to try and create interest in the hare and hound sport.

CHAPTER III.

IT was just a fortnight after her marriage that Leslie Steele began to wonder whether she was happy or miserable.

She put down her novel, borrowed from the public library, yawned, and putting her hands behind her head surveyed the garish little sitting-room. The gaudy china vases on the mantelpiece, the photographs of the landlady's departed relatives, the oleographs on the walls—to such adornment she had been accustomed all her life. Behind the folding doors was her tiny bedroom—really a boxroom, as Mrs. Jones, in an outburst of candor, admitted. Through the open window she could hear the whirring of the cars along the Chiswick Highroad. But to that welcome sound she could almost have fancied herself back in her aunt's second-best parlor at Teffingham. How very different all this was from the home to which she had so often in imagination seen herself brought as a bride!

Exclusive to you Hill's novice had not seemed so bad the night that her soldier lover had brought her here after their departure from Hastings. It had had all the romance and excitement of an elopement. That journey to London, those two alone together while the train roared through a night of storm and rain. And then the drive through an unfamiliar part of London—their passionate embrace as he left her with a promise to see her again the next day. That night she had had no misgivings, no regrets—only exultations and a delicious sense of security in love.

Two mornings later she had gone alone to be married to him at the Heunslow Registry Office. For the first time she saw him in uniform. How gallant and splendid he looked!

His spurs made the merriest music. He was taller by an inch, she noticed with intense pride, than the two comrades he had brought with him. They were very good fellows, he had told her, and she liked them, but she wished that they had not quenched themselves with such rigid stiffness during the brief ceremony, or congratulated her with such boisterous good humor when it was over, assuring her with hearty hands that Steele was one of the best, a regular out-and-outer.

SHE FINDS IT DELIGHTFUL TO GO TO MEET HIM

Happily Victor had invited no one to share their wedding breakfast at a pretty riverside inn at Hampton. They had spent the afternoon rowing in the gardens round the old palace, returning in the misty Autumn twilight to their home—these furnished apartments at Chiswick.

Their honeymoon lasted less than twenty-four hours. It was with difficulty that Victor had obtained leave for so long immediately after his extended furlough.

"It's no good asking you to stand the life in the barracks," he said. "I've ten or twelve pounds put by. With that and my pay we'll manage somehow." He had looked as fine worried as he said that, but all further discussion of ways and means and prospects she had cut short with a kiss. There were no difficulties she was sure he could not overcome, no hardships that would not seem light with him.

It was delightful going to meet him at Kew Bridge or Isleworth in the early afternoon, and bringing him back to their little home, or going for a walk in Kew Gardens or to Richmond.

She was no worse off, she supposed, than all young married couples whose means were engaged throughout the day. But no—these had friends and relatives and money to spend. She knew no one. Victor, she had learned, was the only son of a small Bristol provision-man—a second-hand bookseller—who had cast him off when, in pursuance of his lavish enthusiasm, he enlisted.

The smile faded. She wished for the first time since her marriage that Victor was not obliged always to wear his uniform in London—at least, not in the streets. Somehow she felt it was not at all like the life she dreamed of.

The entrance of the landlady with a parcel put an end to her reverie. It had been delivered from the local postoffice and was addressed in the faint, crabbed handwriting of her aunt to "Miss Leslie Morne." Dreading her only relative's reproaches, she had simply neglected to write of her departure from Hastings by telegram. Inside the wrapper she found a note. "I have just learned from Mrs. Penn," ran, "that you have left your situation all on account of a disgraceful courtship and bad behavior. I have done my duty to you all these years and now I wash my hands of you."

SHE DISCOVERS NOTES WRITTEN TO HER MOTHER

So her aunt believed that she had run away with some aristocratic libertine, she recalled bitterly. However, the terms of the letter made a reply or explanation impossible to her pride. She turned curiously to the remaining contents of the packet.

There were a number of books, the smallest a Bible, the largest four 4to inscribed with her initials in a faded, unfamiliar hand, had evidently belonged to her mother. On the fly-leaf of one—a volume of poetry—was written in a woman's hand: "To my dear one, from R. 6-5-88." She turned the pages. Several passages were marked—it was plain that they had all related to man's inconstancy. She came at last upon a thin bundle of letters tied with a satin ribbon. She took it in her hand and flushed deeply. She felt rather than knew that these contained the story of her mother's love—would reveal the secret of her own origin, which she had always feared to penetrate.

It was a hackneyed story that the few letters told, and one not greatly different from what she had always suspected.

Indications of the writer's rank were not wanting. "As you know, dear heart," he wrote "my title, such as it will be, will bring no money with it."

Nothing remained in the package save a tress of auburn hair, which she kissed with a passionate thrill of pride had passed now. What did her high-born ancestors matter? She was the wife of a sergeant, of a man who two or three years before had been bullied and sworn at by other sergeants, who would take orders from any of his superior officers.

By marrying him she seemed to acquiesce in the law's injustice—to admit herself to be of inferior rank to her own father. . . . She hid her face in her hands and cried silently for a few minutes.

She glanced at the clock. Victor might come at any moment. She flushed to meet her husband with a cry of joy, but he noticed the tears in her eyes.

He held her at arm's length and looked at her in troubled surprise.

She went over to him and put her hand on his shoulder. "I'll go into barracks if you wish, dear," she murmured. "I do love you ever so much."

"What's up?" he asked. You've been crying."

At that two big tears rolled down her cheeks. She brushed them away shamefacedly and angrily. "It's nothing, Victor," she stammered. "It seemed long waiting for you, that's all."

"The fact is, you must be lonely," he said slowly. "It must be as dull as ditchwater for you here all day. I've thought of that a good deal the last day or two. You are happy enough otherwise, aren't you, dear?"

"I'm always happy with you, dear."

She went over to him and put her hand on his shoulder. "I'll go into barracks if you wish, dear," she murmured. "I do love you ever so much."

"I wonder why—a rough sort of chap like me," He laughed, well pleased. "Well, it's no good going on like this. You'll be getting the blues. I tell you what, we must have some friends in now and again."

"But who?" The question was put a little petulantly.

He studied the strap of his spur. "I wonder if you could get on with any of the chaps in the regiment, or their wives? They are not half bad sorts, some of them."

FAR up on the peak among the birds and aeroplanes, in a roofed, steel-plated chamber, with a telephone orderly at his side, a powerful pair of field glasses and range finders at his elbow, and a telescope before him, Gustav Feller, one time gardener and now acting colonel of artillery, watched the burst of shells over the enemy's lines. While other men had grown lean on war, he had taken on enough flesh to fill out the wrinkles around his eyes that shone with an artist's enjoyment of his work. Down under cover of the ridge were his guns, the keys of the instrument that he played by calls over the wire. Their barking was a symphony to his ears; errors of orchestration were errors in aim. He talked as he watched, his lively features reflective of his impressions.

"Oh, pretty! Right into their trenches! Right in the nose! Ja, Ja! But that's off—and so's that! Tell Battery C they're fifty yards over. Oh, heady-eyed gods and shiny little blades—two smacks in the same spot! Humph! Tell Battery C that the trouble with that gun is worn riding; that's why it's going short. Elevate it for another hundred yards—but it ought not to wear out so soon. I'd like to kick the maker of the inspector. The fellows in B 21 will accuse us of inattention. It's time to drop a shell on them to show we're perfectly impartial in our favors. Ja, Ja! Oh, what a pretty smack! Congratulations!"

B 21 was the position of Fracasse's company and the pretty smack the one that broke one man's arm and crushed another's head.

* * * * * * *

The "God with us" song was singularly suited to the great, bull voice of its composer, born to the red and become Captain Strasny to the red business of war. It was he who led the thunder of its yells.

"I certainly like that song," he said. "Well he might, for it had made him famous throughout the nation. "There's Jehovah and brimstone in it. Now we'll have our own."

"But we're always losing positions"; complained one of the men. "Little by little they are getting possession."

"They say the offensive always wins," said another.

"Five abundant three! They count on numbers," said Lieutenant Tom Fresgini.

"There you go, Tom! Any other pessimists or anarchists want to be heard?" called out Stransky. Just then, during the pressure of work, I'll take them to get the whole range." Then, shifting to the number of even five millions."

LOSS 200,000 MEN

Then the telephone in the redoubt brought some news. The staff begged to inform the artillery that the enemy's casualties in the last three days had been 200,000! Immediately everybody was on his feet and began to talk at parliament, as he sometimes called that company of which he was, in the final analysis, the responsible head.

"How do they know?"

"Are you think it's fake?"

"That sums up to pretty near a million!"

"My God! Think of it—a million!"

"We're whittling them down!"

"It doesn't make any difference whether Partow or Lanstron is chief of staff."

"They're paying"

"Paying for our fellows that they've killed! Paying for being in the wrong!"

Stransky, his eyes drawing inward in their characteristic slant, was well pleased with his company, and the scattered exclamatory badinage kept on until it was interrupted by the arrival of the mail. Then he and Lieutenant Tom, understanding their machine as human in its elements, had chosen that: "Any letters from home, boys?"

"Who's this?" exclaimed one man, reading from a newspaper. "They're going to put up a statue of Partow in the capital! It's to show him as he used, Apropos of a war." The artists, and in front of his desk a field of battle, with one face of the base will be his name. Two of the other faces will have 'God with us' and 'Fatherland' for theirs, but for one the legend on the fourth face the war is decided."

"Victory! Victory"" cried those who had listened to the announcement.

Stransky was thinking that they had to do more than hold the lines. Before he should see his girl they had to take back the lost territory. He carried two pictures of Minna in his mind; one when she had struck him in the face as he tried to kiss her and the other as he said good-by at the kitchen door. There was not much encouragement in either.

CHAPTER XIX.

The Ram

IN the closet off the Galland library, where the long-distance telephone was installed, Westerling was talking with the Premier in the Gray capital.

"Your total casualties are $60,000. That is terrific, Westerling!" the Premier was saying.

"Only 200,000 of those are dead!" replied Westerling. "Many with only slight wounds are already returning to the front. Terrific, do you say? Two hundred thousand in five millions is one man out of twenty-five. That wouldn't have worried Frederick the Great or Napoleon much. Eight hundred thousand is one out of six. The trouble is that such vast armies have never been engaged before. You must consider the percentages, not the totals."

"Yet, 800,000! If the public knew!" exclaimed the Premier.

"The public does not know!" said Westerling.

"They guess. They realize that we stopped the soldiers' letters because they told bad news. The situation is serious."

"Why not give the public something to think about?" Westerling demanded.

"I've tried. It doesn't work. The murmurs increase. I repeat, my fears of a rising of the women are well grounded. There is mu-ning in the air. I feel it through the columns of the press, though they are censored. I—"

"Then, soon I'll give the public something to think about, myself!" Westerling broke in. "The dead will be forgotten. The wounded will be proud of their wounds, and their fathers and mothers triumphant when my army extends the other side of the range and starts on its march to the Spree and capital."

"But you have not yet taken a single fortress!" persisted the Premier. "And the Brown's report that they have lost only 200,000 men."

"Langtron is lying!" retorted Westerling hotly. "But no matter. We have taken positions with every attack and kept crowding in closer. I ask nothing better than that the Browns remain on the defensive, leaving initiative to us. We have developed their weak points. The resolute defensive always wins. I know what I am going to attack; they do not. I shall call on you next time to reinforce the defence at our chosen point. I have still plenty of live soldiers left. I shall be with them soon from home, time to win and to hold."

"The army is yours, Westerling," concluded the premier. "I admire your stolidity of purpose. You have my confidence. I shall wait and hold the situation at home the best I can. We go into the hall of fame or into the gutter together, you and I."

POSITION WORTH IT.

For a while after he had hung up the receiver Westerling's head dropped, his muscles relaxed, giving mind and body a release from tension. But his spine was as stiff as ever as he left the closet, and he was even smiling to give the impression that the news from the capital was favorable.

When he called the chiefs of division it was hardly for a staff council, stunned by the losses and repulses, loyally industrious, their opinions unasked, they listened to his whirlwind of orders without comment—all except Turcas.

"If they are appraised of our plan and are able to concentrate more artillery than our guns can silence, the losses will be demoralizing," he observed.

Westering threw up his head, frowning down the objection.

"Suppose they amount to half the forces that we send in!" he exclaimed. "Isn't the position, which means the pass and the range, worth it?"

"Yes, if we both take and hold it; not if we fail," replied Turcas, quite unaffected by Westerling's manner.

"Failure is not in my lexicon!" Westerling shot back. "For great gains there must be great risks."

"We prepare for the movement, your excellency," answered Turcas.

It was a steel harness of his own will that Westerling wore, without admitting that it galled him, and he laid it off only in Marta's presence. With her, his growing sense of isolation had the relief of companionship. She became a kind of mirror of his egotism and ambitions. He liked to have her think of him as a great man unruffled among weaker men. In the quiet and seclusion of the garden, involuntarily as one who has no confidant speaks to himself, reserving fortitude for his guns before the staff, while she, under the spell of her purpose, silently, with serene and wistfully listening eyes, played here, he outlined how the final and telling blow was to be struck.

"We must and we shall win!" he kept repeating.

Agricultural Expert

A Congressman in his last election was opposed by a man who owned a farm and posed as a great friend of the farming interests. The Congressman had once owned a farm and a herd of Jerseys, but had lost money at it and given it up. But he did not intend to let his opponent have him at a disadvantage, so he issued a challenge.

"I will go to any dairy farm you select," he said, "and if I don't milk more cows than you do in the course of an hour I'll withdraw from the contest. If I win then you withdraw."

But his opponent refused to accept the challenge.

"How many cows can you milk per hour?" inquired a friend of the challenger.

"How do I know till I try?" he replied. "I never milked a cow in my life."

Their Married Life

Helen Has a Fur Problem and Thinks She Can Solve It Economically

Copyright, 1914, International News Service.

HELEN took the suit, with its hanger, out of the closet and hung it on the chandelier to examine it critically. After all, she might have bought something more to her liking if she hadn't been forced to shop in such a hurry. She thought resentfully of that horrid trip to Carrie's that Warren had insisted upon her taking and the consequent hurried shopping for whatever she and Winifred had needed for the cooler weather. If she had waited for the later models she might have bought something with fur collar and cuffs.

The suit was a pretty one in the popular shade of brown that was displayed so much in the store windows. The coat had a velvet collar and wide velvet cuffs in the same shade, but Helen, who had secretly longed all last Winter for a coat with fur collar and cuffs, looked at it now with a dissatisfied air. She should have waited for the later models, unless—a brilliant idea had struck her. Perhaps she could utilize her furs for the purpose.

Warren had given Helen a handsome set of lynx two Witters ago. The neckpiece was large and could be used for the cuffs as well as the collar. Helen jumped up with the excitement of the thought. Of course, Warren would probably be furious if she had the neckpiece cut up, but they weren't wearing such very large neckpieces this year anyway. Besides, the furs were hers, and if she preferred to use them on a coat, it was her affair entirely.

Helen rushed to the big cedar chest in her room and pulled out her furs from under a last year's storm coat and Warren's dress suit. She shook them out vigorously and flung the neckpiece around her to get the effect. After all, it was very good looking and if she used part of it for cuffs the collar would not be large enough to wear with anything but her suit. Was it worth it? And then the thought of the silky black fur against the brown of her suit decided her, and she went back to the living room with the furs, the suit still on the hanger flung over her arm.

SHE TAKES THE FUR TO A LARGE ESTABLISHMENT.

The question now was to send it to a tailor who would do the job properly and probably charge her a large sum for it, or try the thing herself. She examined the neckpiece critically. There was a separate piece extending over the shoulders which would do beautifully for the cuffs, but hardly liked to undertake the thing. The fur would have to be cut in one place, and she couldn't bear to do that without knowing how to go about it.

She slipped the collar piece over the brown suit hooked it, but perhaps after all the black might be a little too dark for it. She had spoken to the saleswoman about fur on it when she had bought the suit. Perhaps if she called at the fur department, or better still, went down, they would tell her whether or not it would be advisable to use her lynx on so dark a shade of brown. In the elevator on the store Helen noticed a woman with a suit on much the same shade of hers. There was a collar and cuff set of golden brown fur which made the suit look several shades lighter, and was most beautiful. The suit was wore a brown hat with a touch of burnt orange, and the effect was smart. Already Helen was beginning to think better of her idea to cut up her lynx for the neckpiece and was now that she hadn't cut into it herself.

The elevator stopped and Helen stepped out and walked leisurely to the fur department. Again she was undecided as to what to do. If she did not use her lynx there was no probability of her having the much desired collar and cuffs, for the simple reason that she couldn't afford to buy more furs. She began to fear that she had stayed at home. The woman in the brown suit had made her discontented.

"Something I can do for you, madam?" said a saleswoman as Helen stopped a moment before a black velvet evening coat trimmed with fur.

"Only seventy-five dollars. Would you like to slip it on?"

"Oh, no," said Helen quickly. "I don't need another half yard," this. I want to look at fur trimmings."

THE SALESWOMAN OFFERS HELEN A BARGAIN

"You'll find them over at the counter," said the saleswoman, passing a languid hand over her elaborate coiffure.

Helen walked over to the counter with a determination to find out what she had come down town for, at any rate.

There were some small neck pieces in the show case, and furs of all descriptions were hanging from the shelves.

"Something in furs?" said a brisk little woman, coming up to Helen and noting her perplexed expression. "Perhaps I can help you decide, madam."

"I should like to know if your lynx would look well on a dark brown suit for cuffs and collar".

"Why, yes," a little doubtfully, "but how would you like something in a golden brown fur, or something a little darker? Brown would be so much better on a brown suit."

Helen was silent.

"We have something here that could be used for the purpose; the widest fur we have which could be used without cutting. You wanted something by the yard, didn't you? That would be the most practical thing, I should think."

The saleswoman was detaching a long strip of brown fur from the back. "This is the very best skunk, madam, twelve-fifty a yard. Beautiful fur on a brown suit, I should think."

The fur was just the right width and a beautiful color. Helen wondered if it would be too extravagant to buy a yard. She could put the fur on herself, to save expense, and the suit would look beautiful with the brown fur.

"Would a yard be enough for collar and cuffs?" she said finally.

"I should think so; let me measure. You want a stand-up collar on the other kind? If you want a stand-up collar I should think that you might get it out of a yard. However, to make sure, you'd better take a yard and a half."

Helen was thinking rapidly. She could take off the velvet collar of her coat and line the fur with it. If she did that there would be no linings to buy.

"I don't need another half yard," she said finally, "a yard and a quarter would be plenty."

A YARD WILL BE ENOUGH, SHE DECIDES AT LAST

"But we don't sell fur less than a half yard, madam, you would have to take a yard or a yard and a half."

"Well, I'll take a yard, and if I don't have enough I can come back for more."

"All right, madam, you won't mind if you have to piece it, will you? You see, if you don't have it all in one strip you would have to piece it anyway."

"I'll take the risk," said Helen firmly. "I think I can make it do."

While she was waiting for her package Helen was making some rapid calculations. She could hardly wait to get home and try the fur on her suit. And if she found that it would be impossible to manage the job of putting the fur on herself she wondered if it would be possible for her to squeeze enough out of her allowance to pay a tailor's bill without telling Warren.

It would be so much nicer to wait and let him see the coat on without telling him first that she would have to have extra money. He would be sure to tell her that the fur was a piece of unnecessary extravagance.

Back in the apartment at last, Helen tossed her things carelessly on the bed and hastily pulled the fur out of the wrappings. There was a breathless moment while she measured the fur around the collar. Yes, if she fulled the cuffs on just a little there would be enough and the velvet could be used as an interlining with the satin outside. She would be able to do the job herself without any trouble.

Helen hummed a gay little tune as she hurried into her room for her work basket. What fun it would be, almost like having a new suit, and she was sure to like the suit twice as well, too. That in itself was enough to soothe her conscience if she had felt at all extravagant. After all, she could always make the extra expense up to Warren in some other way.

WRITES FROM SCOTLAND TO 'BUY-A-BALE'

A communication reached the editorial room of the AMERICAN yesterday from Scotland. It was as eloquent as it was brief and welcome.

It was not a letter. The envelope contained a business card of regulation size—and a check for $50. On the card was printed the name:

"Alex. Manson Stewart, No. 1 Wilson street, Mollfield," and in writing, "Glasgow, Scotland."

And written in blue ink above the name was this terse message, which had the ring of loyalty and the fervor of a true Scotch toast:

"Buy a bale for me.

"$50—enclosed."

It didn't require any occult power to decide that Alex. Manson Stewart was a man of affairs and a big-hearted, understanding Scotchman, who did not mince matters or waste words, but who knew a worthy cause and whose eyes and heart were in touch with conditions.

But the most gratifying feature of the message was that the "Buy-a-Bale-of-Cotton" crusade started by Mr. Hearst and his newspapers to relieve congested trade conditions in the South, had reached the attention of a business man in Scotland, more than 3,000 miles away, and that the AMERICAN was the agency.

Some tribute to the circulation, scope and influence of the AMERICAN. But the AMERICAN'S globe-circling qualities have been demonstrated before.

MUSIC SCHOOL CONCERT SERIES AT LOW PRICES

The music lovers of this city have before them a unique privilege and opportunity to cultivate their love for the art.

Artists of world-wide fame have been engaged to appear under the auspices of the Boston Music School Settlement in a series of four concerts on alternate Sunday afternoons at the Boston Theatre. That these concerts are intended for the whole body of music-loving people may be seen from the price for admission—fifteen to seventy-five cents. Think of hearing at such prices grand opera singers for such a sum as Caruso, Tetrazzini, Mme. Gadski, Mme. Lerner, Sembrich and Maud Powell!

That the concerts will be well attended is a foregone conclusion. But the point of importance is that the success of this first venture would be so emphatic as to establish for this city in a permanent way the idea and organization of high-grade musical performances in which the great artists of the world appear. That such artists are happy and inspired an id the surroundings of a truly popular audience everyone of them has time and again testified to. The coming concerts, therefore, mean much to Boston.

Apple Day Will Be Observed All Over Land Tuesday

"Apple Day" will be observed next Tuesday throughout the country, New England, especially, is expected in this observance, as here the crop is unusually bountiful.

It is suggested that everyone should co-operate with the farmer in helping to dispose of his crop, and "Buy a barrel of apples" is the slogan of the market-men to induce the public to help move this great New England crop.

The State Board of Agriculture is doing its part to accelerate the movement and has offered two valuable cups to declare for the best window display of apples.

Everybody is eligible to compete for these cups, and the only conditions is that prospective contestants notify the State Board of Agriculture before October 20.

Eat an Apple a Day to Help Boom New England

Eat at least an apple a day and improve your health and the prosperity of New England. This is the slogan of the Apple Consumers' League of New England, which has issued a "Housekeepers' Apple Book," giving 197 apple recipes. Here are two of them:

APPLE BUTTER CANAPES.

Cut thick slices from a loaf of brown bread; stamp into rounds with a biscuit cutter. Spread each round with apple butter. In the centre place an English walnut or hickory nut meat and arrange a border of chopped nuts around the edge. Serve with cheese cubes.

APPLE BUTTER.

Pare, core and quarter the desired quantity of apples, allowing one-third of sweet to two-thirds of sour apples. Boil sweet cider until it is reduced one-half. While the cider is boiling rapidly add apples until the mixture is the desired thickness. Cook slowly, stirring constantly and skimming when necessary. When the apples begin to separate from the cider, take two pounds of sugar to each bushel of apples used; add a little ground cinnamon and boil until it remains in a smooth mass, when a little is cooled. Usually one and one-half bushels of apples are enough for one and one-half gallons of boiled cider.

CHEF AT FOOD FAIR GIVES NEW FISH RECIPES

Chef Francois Jaeger interested a throng of women who filled the Food Fair in Mechanics Building by preparing several fish dishes at the New England Fish Exchange booth.

One of the most tempting ways to serve halibut he said, is in the form of salad., He gave this rule: "Steam a slice of halibut, first well rubbed over with salt, until the flesh easily separates from the bone, take the fish and add French dressing, with a few gratings of raw onions. Arrange in a salad dish, garnished with crisp lettuce leaves and serve with sweet pickles."

Miss Elsie Hare of Milton was chairman of the committee that prepared the Red Cross exhibit, formed by ex-Governor Guild "the best Red Cross exhibit ever given in Boston."

BOSTON AMERICAN
80 AND 82 SUMMER ST., BOSTON OCT. 17, 1914.

Oh, Yes, Boston Is the Address of ALL the Champions—Baseball, Football, Golf, Tennis, Rowing and Yacht Racing

MORAL—If You Want to Be a Winner, SAIL FOR BOSTON, "the Land of the Beans and the Home of the Braves."

A certain until-recently-obscure poet, more discerning than distinguished, writes:

"Oh, say, boys, just see where the baseball flag waves—
"O'er the land of the beans and the home of the Braves."

Which, though indifferent poetry, is mighty good truth. We might add, mighty significant truth. Significant, because it once more emphasizes the fact that Boston is the stamping ground of the champions of champions. Just as it always was. And, we are confident, just as it always will be.

Whether it be our sublime climate; our noble ideals of sportsmanship, the energetic, clear-minded, clean-limbed youths that we breed; or the polish that we put on the natives of elsewhere whose wisdom induces them to abide here—or whether it be the native diet suggested by the poem writer quoted above—or whether it be something else—Boston is the home of ALL the champions.

Boston produced or developed and justly lays claim to the champions of all of the sports worth while.

Everybody knows about the Braves. They are not only the champions of all baseball, but they got the championship by beating what the so-called experts called the "greatest baseball machine ever constructed" — beat 'em four straight — broke all records.

Then there's football. Harvard's the champion—Harvard is located in Cambridge, to be sure, but the Crimson football warriors train and play the game in the Stadium, which is in Brighton, and Brighton is in Boston.

Then golf. Francis Ouimet is the national amateur champion. He is also the amateur champion of France. He's Boston-born and Boston-bred.

Next tennis. R. Norris Williams is the champion of that lively sport. (Teddy Roosevelt says tennis is SOME sport and Teddy is no mollycoddle.) Mr. Williams came here from Philadelphia. But he won his tennis honors after he went to Harvard and he was a Boston-bred tennis star when he walloped the far-famed ex-king of them all, Maurice E. McLoughlin, of the Pacific Coast.

Reverting to golf. Besides owning Ouimet, the men's champion, we also lay claim to the champion of the fair sex, Mrs. H. Arnold Jackson, who recently won the highest women's golf honors, the national women's amateur championship. She is to the fair golfers exactly what Ouimet is to the men golfers.

And rowing. From the Charles River Basin—Boston's great marine parkway — sprang the Harvard eight which sailed to England and triumphed in the most famous of all rowing classics, the Henley Cup. The Henley Cup is admittedly emblematic of the world's rowing championship.

Also yacht racing. Boston produced Charles Francis Adams, descendant of a long line of famous Adamses, who sailed the Resolute in its recent triumphant races with the two other cup yacht candidates and of whom it was said, "he could have won with any one of the three boats."

Baseball, football, golf, tennis, rowing and yacht racing. The six most formidable and attractive and popular sports in all the athletic calendar. And we have plenty of champions in the minor sports, too—young men worthy of a few laurels which lack of space deprives us of handing to them just now.

We, in Boston, do not brag of this clean sweep of all the field. It's only in pursuance of our long-established habit of turning out the best there is in anything we tackle that we have produced all these in Boston—

"The land of the beans and the home of the Braves."

These few kind remarks, ladies and gentlemen, were suggested by a feature story dealing with the land of the champion athletes—ALL the champion athletes, as we said before—a feature which will be found in the sporting section of tomorrow's BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN.

Harvard's Stand for Free Speech

Harvard College has honored itself and taken a stand which in the end will more than compensate it for any immediate financial loss if it has in fact, as reported, refused to be dragooned into accepting the resignation of Professor Munsterberg by an individual who threatens to withhold a large gift if that vigorous champion of Germany retains his post in the faculty.

It isn't a question of whether Professor Munsterberg's rapid-fire proclamations in behalf of the Kaiser and his war policy are justified by facts, or pleasing to the people, or not. For our own part, we say frankly that we think the professor much superior as a psychologist than as a temperate debater of international issues. His articles in defence of the Fatherland roar like one of the famous new howitzers. But we are not sure that they are particularly effective in making converts or friends. However, they are the views of a distinguished man, a man of the very highest order of well-trained intellect, of cosmopolitan habit and training, speaking in a cause which he has at heart. But to seek to silence him by virtually ousting him from his collegiate chair, and depriving him of the income which it assures, would be a crime against free thought and free speech which certainly no institution of higher education like Harvard should permit.

The report is that a prospective donor in England threatens to cancel a proposed bequest of $10,000,000 to the university unless Munsterberg is silenced or removed from his post. The professor very creditably declines to withhold his honest opinions from publication, and manfully wishing that the college should not suffer thereby, presents his resignation. The university most commendably refuses to be thus coerced into denying him freedom of thought and speech, and declines to accept his resignation. The whole affair is most creditable to all concerned except the bulldozing benefactor whose name, hitherto unknown to newspaper readers, need not be given the measure of fame that would result from mentioning it now.

Bungalow Discovered—Nothing

I'M NOT GOING TO THE OFFICE TO DAY IM GOING TO CAMP RIGHT HERE UNTIL I FIND OUT ABOUT THESE MYSTERIOUS FOOT PRINTS - IS YOUR SILVER SAFE?
I SUPPOSE SO I HAVENT LOOKED
"I SUPPOSE SO I HAVENT LOOKED" NO BODY HOME !!
AH! THERE THEY GO IN TO THE KITCHEN IM A REGULAR SHERLOCK HOLMES
ITS A LONG WAY TO TIPPERARY
T. E. POWERS

Old Man Bungalow took a day off to solve the mystery of the footprints seen around his house, the Nutshell, every morning. You can see for yourself where the trail led, but Bungalow didn't discover a thing. Foiled! Baffled! In other words, made a boob of! But you, intelligent reader, may notice a small object near the kitchen table. It is a clew? Hist!

All Play and No Practice Would Never Win a Pennant

George T. Stallings of Georgia, Baseball's Man of the Hour, Writes for the Sunday AMERICAN the Secret of His Great Success—And It Isn't Any Secret at All!

"I have kept everlastingly on the job."

So says Manager George T. Stallings of the Boston Braves, writing for the Sunday AMERICAN the "secret" of his great success in baseball.

"I have kept everlastingly on the job."

Why, THAT isn't any "secret"!

Keeping everlastingly on the job is the way to success in the law, in medicine, in politics, in journalism, in that little store on the side street, which, in twenty years, may be the BIG store on the CORNER.

Manager Stallings' confessions will be interesting and instructive reading for others than baseball fans. We strongly recommend the Stallings contribution to ALL the members of the Sunday AMERICAN family

"AND THE DUKE SAID TO ME."

One of our young men went out to the World's Series games with His Grace the Duke of Manchester.

We have asked the young man to write for the Sunday AMERICAN just what the Duke DID and what he SAID and how he ACTED.

It isn't often that a live Duke becomes a baseball reporter, even for two days. You will like this story of how "Manchester" behaved as a laboring person.

After a generation, South Boston is to see a new face on the bench of the District Court. At seventy-seven Judge Fallon is to be succeeded by Judge Logan, not yet forty

Who IS Logan?

ANYBODY in South Boston can answer that question; the Sunday AMERICAN attempts to answer it for readers outside the peninsular district. Logan is Colonel of the Ninth Regiment, as his father was at Santiago. You will be glad to make his acquaintance. The new judge is a "comer."

But the Sunday AMERICAN will not be TOO serious.

Dear knows there is trouble enough, and gloom enough, in this old world, without GOING LOOKING FOR IT.

Mr. T. E. Powers is a PATRIOT.

"Old Timer" wrote to us the other day to recall that Artemus Ward, one of the greatest of American humorists, reached the pinnacle of his fame in the darkest days of the Civil War. Ward made Americans forget the war, for a time, and enjoy a laugh with him.

In like manner Mr. Powers continues to make Americans laugh. You will find some of his best work in the Sunday AMERICAN.

In EVERY department tomorrow's Sunday AMERICAN will be up to the high mark we have set ourselves and which we MEAN TO KEEP.

It will contain the latest news of the world. It will be bright, chatty, entertaining and well informed. And from the first page to the last it will be written in good humor.

Say a timely word to your newsdealer.

THE LEGACY

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

Copyright, 1914, by the Star Company

THERE hangs a picture on my wall;
Three leafless trees; dead woods beyond;
Brown grasses and a marshy pond;
And over all
An amber sunset of late Fall.

Too frail the artist heart to cope
With all the stern demands of fame.
He passed before he won a name
Or gained his hope
To realms where dreams have larger scope.

Yet in the modest little square
Of canvas that I daily see
He left a legacy to me
Of something rare,
Far more than what is painted there.

For tree and grass and sunset sky
Hold subtler quality than art;
It is the painter's pulsing heart
That seems to cry,
"I loved these things—they cannot die."

And so they live, to stir and move
Each gazer's soul, because they speak
Of something mightier than technique;
They live to prove
The immortality of love.

They speak this message day by day:
"Love, love your work, or small or great;
Love, love, and leave the rest to fate.
For love will stay
When all things else have passed away."

DO YOU KNOW THAT—

There are 10,000 canoes on the Charles River, more than on any other body of water in the world?

LETTERS FROM AMERICAN READERS

THANKS FROM SISTERHOOD OF TEMPLE ISRAEL

Editor Boston AMERICAN:

Dear Sir—Permit me to thank you in behalf of the Sisterhood of Temple Israel and the children for the generous contribution of costumes furnished by the Boston AMERICAN, which gave so much pleasure to the poor children, who rarely have such a treat. They would not have appreciated the tableaux of war and peace half so much were it not for the help of your paper. There were between 500 and 550 present, and a junior peace league was formed by the children of the class of 1914, going on record as the first junior peace league of Temple Israel.

Conveying my personal thanks to you for your courtesy and expressing my appreciation to your paper,

I am yours most gratefully,

THERESE GOULSTON,
Chairman.

Boston, October 15, 1914.

THE AMERICAN'S NEUTRALITY

Editor Boston AMERICAN:

Dear Sir—Allow me to congratulate you not only on your impartiality in presenting the war news but in the completeness of your reports. As a woman of German parentage my sympathies are naturally with the German army, but I find that you present the German side as well as the other sides, and that I can really gain some idea of what is happening in the warring countries by reading your columns. M. K.
